Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 9th day of April next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the City of Adrian, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of said Petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said Petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

COMPOUND OXYGEN NOT A DRUG

A NEW TREATMENT.

For Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic and Nervous Disorders.

A CARD.

We the undersigned, having received great and permanent benefit from the use of "COMPOUND OXYGEN," prepared and administered by DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, of Philadelphia, and being satisfied that it is a new discovery in medical science, and all that is claimed for it, consider it a duty which we owe to the many thousands who are suffering from chronic and so-called incurable diseases to do all that we can to make its virtues known, and to inspire the public with confidence.

We have personal knowledge of Drs. Starkey & Palen. They are educated, intelligent and conscientious physicians, who will not, we are sure, make any statement which they do not know or believe to be true, nor publish any testimonials or reports of cases which are not genuine.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Old winter has evidently procured an extension of time this year, judging from the new stock of snow sent us recently.

We should like much to learn thro' the HERALD what fate has been pleased to do with "Pearlie" the fair Brooklynitish pencil pusher of "days agone". Has some grander commission been presented as her mortal dowry, or has her excellency "gone up higher," that her sircastic cuts and round retorts are seen no more in the columns to which we contribute?

Since our last communication a temperance boom has struck our R. R. pregnant little villa and abolished the whiskey traffic for the present at least. Let the good work go on.

Mrs. J. H. Underwood and Mrs. Edward Cleveland are each in a critical state of health at this writing. Consumption is the plague. Numerous other of our citizens, including the writer, have been afflicted by severe colds attended with a somewhat complex trouble in the throat and lungs.

Mr. A. W. LaBarre, of the firm of LeBarre, Younglove & Morley, went to Toledo Friday of last week to procure a new saw for their mill at this place. They will resume sawing this week.

E. M. Wilson has a new creamery building in process of construction near the Lewis ashery, and expects to do a largely increased business in that line this season.

A Mr. Terrill, of Somerset, is putting a new and complete stock of hardware goods in the Swartout building west of the creek, while the firm of Eaton Bros., of Hudson, are making preparations to open a furniture store just across the street in the Lewis block.

A new building for drug store purposes is also in prospect on the same side of the creek. As to the other side the recent arrival of a tin type shadow shop constitutes about all which we can chronicle by way of change at present.

MACON CENTER CUTS.

No more "murmurs" at the head of our column, and we presume Macon wants no more "center cuts," as per last week.

Samuel T. Stewart has moved into the Lewis Miller house.

Two small boys of Geo. Sisson's were splitting wood. A miss blow from one struck the other on the foot, severing three toes.

Roy Mead is in a very critical condition from a paralytic stroke and mental prostration. His recovery is doubtful.

Paris Mills, son of Isaac C. Mills, who has been a great sufferer during the past three months, died the 13th inst., aged 25 years.

Mrs Arthur Anderson, an aged lady, and much esteemed, died on the 12th.

Frank P. Wintersteen, late of New York, and Miss Mary Smith of Macon were married at the home of the bride's parents the 14th inst. The usual presents and congratulations.

Mr. Russell of the Weston glee club and a Mr. Anderson are looking up dairy cows in this section. They in connection with others favored us with a call last Friday evening. It is strange how half a dozen good singers, an organ, piano and violin, will boost a clock ahead.

Jesse Harper is a host. His two lectures Thursday afternoon and evening, occupying over two hours each, awakened unbounded enthusiasm, and the oyster supper between just fitted.

Irve Osborn is keeping bachelor's hall. One month ago his family consisted of himself, four young men and a maiden lady, neither two of kin. Since then the latter five have taken to themselves consorts and floated away, leaving Irve alone and without hope in the world. Five marriages in a family of six within a month. Next.

The lecture course has closed and the citizens may be interested in learning the financial result which we condense from the report as follows. The lecture course association, consisting of nine persons, met at the hall Saturday evening, and on adjusting accounts found that the expenses exceeded receipts by $32.65, which divided among the members gives 455 each per lecture more than those having season tickets (or 54c per lecture, which is better than to have traveled eight or ten miles to a village and paid half that amount. When we take into consideration the extreme low price of season tickets, 75c for eight lectures, so that all might attend, the inclement winter, the high price paid most of the speakers, and the lack of harmony in the community on domestic matters, tending to wet blanket everything going on at the hall, the association is well satisfied with the result, and thank the public for their generous support, good behavior, and manifest approval.

A son of W. D. Easlick poisoned himself with sumach on the face and hands so that he was in a critical condition [illegible] days. He is out again but quite swollen and sore.

RIDGEWAY RUMBLINGS.

C. L. Waring home.

Mrs. Salome Clark has returned from Grand Rapids.

Nathan Spencer, of Holloway, is working up the fire insurance business in this locality.

Libbie Pilbeam was given a surprise last week at the home of Mrs. Sarah Rappleye. About twenty-five young people were present. Miss Pilbeam has made many friends during her stay here this winter.

The new time card which went into effect last Sunday gives notice that trains will arrive and leave Detroit at the new union depot at the foot of 12th street, a few blocks west of the Central depot.

DeWitt Arner, the great surpriser, was treated likewise last week, when about seventy-five of all ages gathered in upon him and the rest of the family.

As the time for the township election draws near it would be well for all those who were not registered last fall to remember that they will have to do so yet if they vote this spring.

Joshua Waring a pioneer resident of this township died at midnight Saturday night. The funeral services were held Tuesday at the church. Obituary notice next week.

RAILROAD NOTES.

The Marshall Statesman of the 16th has this important and encouraging news:

Judge Ingersoll spent a portion of the week at Lansing on business connected with the amendments of the charters of the Michigan Central and the Michigan Southern railroads. A joint session of the railroad committees of both houses, to which the proposed amendments were referred, was held on Wednesday and Thursday of this week. The attorneys and some of the high officials of both roads were present and decided opposition was made to the passage of the bills. Among some of the statements made by Ashley Pond, of Detroit, was that the Michigan Central had never sought to exercise the prerogative given it by the charter, namely that of preventing other roads from running parallel to their line nearer than a distance of 20 miles, and prohibiting the crossing of their line by other railroads. Mr. Ingersoll pointed out the fact that last spring the Michigan Central had served notices on the Toledo, and Milwaukee company that any crossing of its line would be resisted to the extent of its power, and also that the same notices had been served on the M. & O. These notices had the effect of preventing the building of the road last spring. After some of these discrepancies had been shown up the companies withdrew their opposition and the bill passed the senate committee yesterday and is expected to pass the house committee to day, when they will be reported to both houses and will go through with a rush. That the Mansfield, Coldwater and Michigan road will be ironed north from this city is now practically assured.

Kalamazoo Gazette. The Lake Shore road yesterday took a party of 55 choppers and other laborers from Grand Rapids to Somerset, where the M. & O. is to cross the Lake Shore Ypsilanti branch. Another force will go soon to the same destination. The party yesterday was in charge of Mr McBride.

Things are just a booming at Addison. The piles are being driven to cross the mill pond, and the town is full of R. R. hands. The number of hands between Tecumseh and Jerome is about 2,000. It is calculated that the road will be in operation by the middle of July. A number of new firms are starting in business among them M. F. Turrell hardware, Dr Powers drugs, and R. J. Eaton branch furniture. Real estate is held at pretty high figures which may elevate to regard the beam least we have seen such policy prevent the growth of other towns. We know of corner lots that would have been built upon ten years ago but for a dog in the manger principle. Let Addison be reasonable and welcome and encourage capital and enterprise.

A neighboring exchange gives this wholesome advice to the public in general, and which it will be well to heed. "Take your county paper first and add to it as many metropolitan papers as you are able to take, but do not subscribe for the city weekly and depend on borrowing the county paper of your neighbor. And we might add here. The metropolitan paper must invariably be paid for in advance and the county paper which is more especially devoted to your local interests is entitled to as much respect.

COUNTY CONDENSATIONS.

The "Kids" elected their village ticket in Deerfield.

The Japanese Liniment Company of Morenci is booming.

It takes sixteen men to turn out subs at the Hudson tub factory.

Clinton will have another roller skating masquerade this evening.

The Hudson Congregational church held a Longfellow social last week.

Dr. Nix the newly elected President of Hudson, declines the honor.

L. F. Wheeler will soon be "rambling around" Clinton and Manchester.

The new bridge across the Raisin, two miles north of Clinton, is completed.

The temperance ticket was chosen at the Clinton charter election last week.

The Deerfield metal cover company have added a new machine to their factory.

The next regular examination of teachers will take place at Adrian on the 30th inst.

A G. A. R. post has been organized at Hudson to be known as DeGolyer Post, No. 110.

Hudson was stirred up for two days last week over a hog case in Justice Hiller's court.

Mrs. Laura E. Dainty, the celebrated elocutionist will lecture in Clinton this evening.

There is talk of running a union non-partisan ticket in Adrian at the coming city election.

John R. Clark will lecture at Canandaigua to-morrow evening on 'Blunders, Big and Little.'

Vet Erskine, of the Clinton Exchange, attended the hotel-keepers' convention at Lansing.

Gilbert Warner, an old resident of Adrian, dropped dead on the sidewalk last Monday afternoon.

Addison is putting on airs since the new railroad has become a fixed fact. Drunken rows are becoming frequent in that village.

Miss Lulu Monaghan of this village has been engaged to teach the spring term of school at Weston at a salary of $40 a month.

The Deerfield Record is in favor of suppressing the bad small boy. There are a good many other towns infested with the same evil.

Adrian Record: A Hudson man with a grudge against an Addison man, went all the way to Addison to get licked—the obliging fellow.

Morenci is nothing if not up with the times. At the last charter election it was voted by a large majority to build a new town hall worth $8,000.

Clinton News: We have made inquiries of a number of our leading fruit growers and they all report their peach buds killed and a good many trees besides, except D. Woodward who says most of his trees are all right so far. His orchard is situated on high ground, which probably accounts for his good fortune.

The Adrian Record sums it up: "Dr. Nix at the Hudson corporation election, took the scalp of Dr. Smart, and was elected by 10 majority. When one doctor doctors another the patient is just as likely to be laid out stark and stiff as though he were any other man. Paregorically speaking, Nix knocked Smart's brains out with a paving cobble stone."

Adrian Record: There was a meeting of the officers and directors of the Lenawee County Agricultural Society Saturday afternoon at Smith & Tobey's bank, to hear the reports of various committees and to give an opportunity to bid for the fair next fall. Tecumseh and Morenci were represented and want the fair badly, but neither would make any definite proposition, and it was finally moved that the committee hold itself open for proposals from all parts of the county for three weeks and at the next meeting agree to accept the most favorable one. The meeting adjourned until April 7, 1883.

Morenci Observer: A party representing the county agricultural society was in town last Monday to confer with a committee appointed by our village association in reference to holding a union fair of the two societies here next autumn. On looking over the situation it was decided that a thousand dollars would be needed for additional buildings and facilities to accommodate a combined exhibition of the two societies, and W. A. Mace was appointed a committee to solicit the requisite amount of our citizens. A meeting of the citizens is called for Monday evening to take the project into consideration. Let there be a general turn out.

The value of an article is almost always indicated by its price, and for years the people were content to pay $3 for a genuine Livermore Stylographic Pen, and the same pens are yet doing good service. The success of these pens led unscrupulous persons to get up inferior imitations, which they offered at such low prices that many persons, not understanding the difference were induced to buy them. The Livermore Company therefore cut down the price of their short plain Pens to $2, and short gold mounted to $2.50 each, to give everybody a chance to have the best article of the kind. You can buy them for that money by remitting the amount to Louis E. Dunlap, Manager Stylographic Pen Co., 200 Washington St., Boston, the pen together with a package of superior ink will be sent by return mail, and the money will be at once refunded if they do not prove to be perfect and satisfactory in every respect. The Stylographic Pen Co., who manufacture the Livermore Pen, is the largest concern of the kind in the world, with branches at New York, Chicago and London, Eng. The Livermore Stylographic Pen is a pencil which writes ink, never needs sharpening and never wears out, and has been adopted by over 500,000 knights of the quill in this country and abroad. The Stylographic Pen Co. have recently been making great improvements in their famous pen. Full particulars can be obtained by sending for circular.

The High School literary society of Deerfield will exhibit "The Last Loaf" in that village to-morrow evening.

BEFORE AND AFTER MARRIAGE.

BEFORE.

My Maggie! my beautiful darling!
Creep into my arms, my sweet!
Let me fold you again to my bosom—
So close I can hear your heart beat.
What! those little fingers been sewing
One's pricked by the needle, I see!
These hands shall be kept from such labor
When once they are given to me.

Ah! mine, little pet, I will shield you
From trouble, and labor, and care;
I will robe you like some fairy princess,
And jewels shall gleam in your hair.
These slippers you gave me are perfect!
That dressing-gown fits to a T!
My darling! I wonder that heaven
Should give such a treasure to me.

Eight—quarter to—eleven! My precious
Put this when I was with you!
It seems but a moment I've been here
And now—must I go to "Allen's!"

AFTER.

Oh, Meg, you are heavy! I'm tired!
Go sit in the rocker, I pray;
Your weight seems a hundred-fold heavier
Every time I step down in the story of a way.
You had better be mending my coat-sleeve—
That spot you chose it before—
And I want to finish this novel,
And look over those bills from the store.

This dressing-gown sets like the d——l,
Those slippers run down at the heel!
Strange nothing can ever look decent,
Wish you could know how they feel.
What's this bill from Green? Why surely
It's not another new dress!
Look here, I'll be bankrupt before New Year,
Or your store bill will have to grow less.

Eight o'clock! Meg, sew on this button
As soon as you finish the sleeve.
Heigh-ho! I'm so deuced sleepy—
I'll pile off to bed, I believe.

LIFE CLOUDS.

Our path through life is clouded oft
By many a storm severe;
With trembling heart we view the cloud,
We wait, we hope, we fear.

Our spirits shrink before the blast
We feel its icy chill;
The soul in waiting sorrow bows
Yet faith would say "Thy will!"

It nearer comes: soon, soon 'twill fall
Where shall we shelter find?
Where for protection shall we flee
For rest to heart and mind?

'Tis past—and leaves a quiet calm;
Whence comes this cooing dove,
Into the heart late tempest-tossed,
With songs of peace and love?

A still, small voice has been our stay
The "silver lining" shed
A radiance bright, as dread clouds burst
In blessings on our head.

The Brakeman's Story.

HOW A PASSENGER TRAIN WAS SAVED.

"Yes, sir," said the brakeman, as he stood by the stove warming his numbed hands after coming in from braking, "people think, as they sit here in their warm seats and only hear us call out the different stations, that we have a nice, soft, easy, time. But we know better. Imagine yourself on a flat-car all night with the snow dashing into your face, your hands on a cold iron brake, and think if that's easy; or, up on top of a freight car, running along, the wind cutting like a knife, dark as pitch, and watching for fear you may rush suddenly under a bridge and be swept off, and perhaps left to die in the snow. Is that easy? Does that look like a soft job. To be sure, when we are transferred to passenger cars the work is nice enough, but the dangers we have to go through (for generally we have to go on freight cars first) entitle us for something better on a passenger car, and we ain't sorry when we get orders to take the head end of such a regular train.

There are very few brakemen who can't tell some never-to-be-forgotten incident connected with their life on the rail. To explain, let me tell you a story of my own experience.

I remember one night, it was fearfully cold, right in the middle of winter, and snowing hard; I was brakeman in the middle of a freight train. It was running along on slow time that night, and we were two or three miles from the station. I was standing by the brake of a flat-car trying to get warm by stamping, wishing we were at the depot, so that I could go back to the caboose out of the bitter cold, when suddenly I felt the train bumping and jumping as if a wheel had broken, and I knew something was wrong. The whistle blew for brakes, and in a mighty short time we had the train stopped.

With the rest of the men I went back to see what was the matter, thinking that I might get a chance at the stove, for I was nearly frozen. Going back about three hundred feet, we found that one of the rails had got loose and was out of place, but, as we had been going slowly, we had run over the spot safely. Our conductor looked up, and seeing me said hurriedly:

"Jim, get back and signal the passenger train. She will be along in a short time now; and take this," he said, handing me a red light lantern; "we'll go on. You can come with the other train."

With that all hands got on board, and soon there was nothing but myself and the lantern left. A cold gust brought me to myself with a quick turn, and then I remembered what I had to do. Holding the lantern up, I saw the light flickering, and shaking it found it almost empty.

Then I began to feel the responsibility of my position. A lamp without oil in it, the train due in ten minutes, with the chances of its being thrown off the track, and no telling how many people killed or wounded! In a case of this kind, sir, every brakeman will do his best to save human life, although he sometimes loses his own in the attempt, and all he gets for it is having his name in the paper and being a brave fellow.

Quicker than I tell it, I made up my mind that the train must be signaled, lamp or no lamp. But how to do it was the question. If I ran ahead without a light, the engineer might think I wanted to stop the train for robbery—for such things have often been done, you know—and would not only dash right on faster than ever, but maybe try to scald me as the locomotive rushed by.

I tell you I felt like praying just then, but brakemen are not selected for their religious feelings, so I didn't pray much, but looked around and saw a light shining in a window, some distance off. I laid down my lantern carefully on the track, made a bee line for the house, and soon my knock brought a woman to the door, who looked more frightened than I was at my excited appearance. It was useless, to ask for sperm oil—the only sort we use—I cried out—

"For God's sake give me some straw."

She seemed to realize the position, and quickly brought a bundle. Feeling in my pocket, I found three matches, and grabbing the straw, I made my way back to the track.

Laying the straw between the rails, I struck a match and shoved it into the bundle. It flickered an instant and then went out. I felt and found the straw damp. Just then a dull, faint, rumbling sound came down the wind, and I knew she was coming. The train would soon be there.

I struck the second match and it touched off the straw. A blaze, a little smoke, and it was dark again, and, raising my eyes I saw the headlight of the approaching train away in the distance. But trains don't crawl, and the buzzing along the rails told me to be lively. The red light was burning but faintly; five minutes more and it would go out. For an instant I stood paralyzed, when a shrill scream from the engine brought me to my senses, and I saw that in two minutes more she would be on the spot.

Seizing the lantern with one hand, I struck the last match, and bending down, held it carefully inside the straw, and then dashed forward, waving the red light. The glare from the headlight shone down the track, and the engineer saw me, but did not notice the red light—the sudden waving had put it out—only screeching, he came straight on. When the train was almost on me, I jumped one side, and, slinging the lantern over my head, dashed it into the cab. The engineer saw the lamp as it broke on the floor, and seeing the red glass and battered lantern, whistled the danger signal and tried to check up.

Looking down the track, I almost screamed from excitement. The last match had found a dry spot, and the straw was blazing up brightly. The train came to a stand still. She was saved; that's all I remember.

The next I knew I was in the baggage car. They said they had found me lying by the train, in a dead faint, and—excuse me, we are going to stop now. Stamford!" he sung out.

The train stopped, and the writer went home, satisfied that a brakeman's life is an exciting one.

How Old is the World?

Geologists, astronomers and physicists alike have hitherto been baffled in their attempts to set up any satisfactory kind of chronometer which will approximately measure geological time, and thus give us some clue to the antiquity of our globe. It is therefore worth noting that Mr. Mellard Reade, of Liverpool, has contributed to the Royal Society a very suggestive paper, in which he endeavors to grapple with the question by employing the limestone rocks of the earth's crust as an index of geological time. Limestones have been in course of formation from the earliest known geological periods, but it would appear that the later found strata are more calcareous than the earlier, and that there has in fact been a gradually progressive increase of calcareous matter. The very extensive deposition of carbonate of lime over wide areas of the ocean-bottom at the present day is sufficiently attested by the careful soundings of the Challenger. According to the author's estimate, the sedimentary crust of the earth is at least one mile in average actual thickness, of which probably one-tenth consists of calcareous matter. In seeking the origin of this calcareous matter, it is assumed that the primitive rocks of the original crust were of the nature of gigantic or basaltic rocks. By the disintegration of such rocks, calcareous and sedimentary deposits have been formed. The amount of lime salts in waters which drain districts made up of granites and basalts is found, by a comparison of analysis, to be on an average about 3.73 parts in 100,000 parts of water. It is further assumed that the excessed areas of igneous rocks, taking an average throughout all geological time, will bear to the exposure of sedimentary rocks a ratio of about one to nine. From these and other data Mr. Reade concludes that the elimination of the calcareous matter now found in all sedimentary strata must have occupied at least 600,000,000 of years. This, therefore, represents about the minimum age of the world. The author infers that the formation of the Laurentian, Cambrian and Silurian strata must have occupied about 200,000,000 of years; the old red sandstone, the carboniferous, and the poikilitic systems, another 200,000,000; and all the other strata, the remaining 200,000,000. Mr. Reade is, therefore, led to believe that geological time has been enormously in excess of the limits urged by certain physicists; that it has been ample to allow for all the changes which, on the hypothesis of evolution, have occurred in the organic world.

The Future of Religion.

Mr. Froude, in the International Review, refers, in the following extract, to the final and full development of religious truth:

"Man's nature is the same it always was. Science has much to teach us, but its message is not the last nor the highest. If we may infer the future from the past, a time will come when we shall cease to be dazzled with the thing which we call progress, when increasing wealth will cease to satisfy—nay, may be found incapable of being produced or preserved except when relegated to a secondary place—when the allusions which have strangled religion shall be burnt away, and the immortal part of it restored to its rightful sovereignty. A long weary road may be before us. Not easily will an inviolable atmosphere of reverence form around spiritual faith to warn off the insolent intruder. Piety, reverence, humble adoration of the great Maker of the world, are in themselves so beautiful that religious faith might have remained forever behind that enchanted shield, if imaginative devotion could have kept within bounds its wild demands upon reason. Not till Catholics had piled superstition on superstition, not till Protestants had elaborated a speculative theology which conscience as well as intellect at length flung from it as incredible, did the angels which guarded the shrine fold their wings and fly. The Garden of Eden is desecrated not by the trampling of controversy, and no ingenious reconciliations of religion and science, no rivers of caustic holy water, can restore the ruined loveliness of traditionary faith. But the truth which is in religion will assert itself again as it asserted itself before. A society without God in the heart of it is not permitted to exist; and when once more a spiritual creed has established itself which men can act on in their lives, and believe with their whole souls, it is hoped that they will have grown wiser by experience, and will not again leave the most precious of their possessions to be ruined by the extravagance of exaggerating credulity."

Pins and Needles.

THEIR ANCIENT ORIGIN.—WHEN FIRST MADE IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA, ETC.

Pins were made and used by the ancient Egyptians, many being found in tombs and in the pyramids. Needles are also of ancient origin. The first pins manufactured in England were made in 1626; Birmingham is now the headquarters of the pin trade of Great Britain. When pins were first made in England the raw material passed through fourteen different processes before completion, and each of these processes employed a separate operative. The operations consisted of straightening the wire, pointing, cutting into pin length, twisting wire for heads, annealing heads, stamping heads, cleaning, polishing, winnowing, paper pricking and putting in papers.

The business of pin-making was established in this country in 1812, when in consequence of the war with Great Britain, the price rose from 6 cents to $1 per paper. Discontinuation soon consequently stimulated, and pins were manufactured at Greenwich, N. Y. At the close of hostilities the effort was abandoned, as we could no longer compete with English cheap labor and low rates of interest. In 1821, Lemuel Wright, of Massachusetts, invented and patented in England the first machine that made solid-headed pins, but the enterprise lacked encouragement, and it was nearly ten years subsequent before pins of his make were sold in London. Perfect pins by this process were manufactured during the revolution on a single wheel, and this machine, since considerably improved, is the one used at present in the largest manufactories in Birmingham.

Since 1824 several Americans have patented machines for making pins, but the most successful invention was the work of a Mr. Fowler. But the entire process is a mystery to the uninitiated, and the secret is carefully kept hidden from curious eyes. Most of the best American pins are made in Connecticut after Fowler's process. In one establishment are 85 machines, which consume annually many tons of brass or iron wire, and turn out millions of pins. Brass pins are whitened by long boiling in copper vessels containing block tin. The process of making white iron pins is still a secret. There are eight pin factories in the United States, with an annual product of abnut 7,000,000,000 pins.

Pin-papers are marked by the use of a molded piece of wood, which corresponds to those portions represented by the small folds, through which the holes are made for the pins to be secured. The pin-sticker, usually a girl, gathers two of the folds together, and places these between the jaws of a vise having grooves to serve as a guide for the entry of the pins. When filled the paper is released, and held up so that the eye of an expert at once detects every defective pin, and causes its removal.

The first needles made in England were manufactured at London by a negro who came there from Spain during the reign of Queen Mary. He died without imparting the secret of his art; but it was subsequently recovered in 1565 by one Elias Growse. A century later, one Christopher Greening was instrumental in establishing a pin factory at Long Creadon, in Buckinghamshire. English needles of the best makes are very elastic, the metal being suitably tempered, and the eyes all finely finished and burnished, so as not to cut the thread. A great many needles are spoiled while in the process of tempering, as the steel of which they are made is apt to be so variable in quality, and in a heated state, while undergoing chemical action, they are easily injured. Scorching is also a delicate operation, and needles when not properly hardened and polished are always of inferior strength, and quickly accumulate rust.

Strict Vegetarianism.

A man wandering down the street, and approaching a grocery store, asked of the proprietor:

"You got some greens, don't it?"

"Greens? Yes, sir."

"You got rooting bakers?"

"Rutabagas? Yes, sir." How many will you have?"

"Got some little red plates, mit green tops?"

"Red plates, with green tops? Well, no, sir. I suppose you will find them at the china store up town."

"Don't got no little red plates? Guess it was better if you got some. Guess you vos a liar. Vot you call dose?

"Those? Why, those are radishes."

"Red dishes—dot's what I said. Say, maybe I got me some leiters of you tomorrow. You got dot?"

"Letters? There are no letters here for you; you must inquire at the postoffice."

"Ankwire mit the postoffice for letters? Dose vos a fine skeems. I vos up town and auf a bake-shop and want me some buns, and de man said, 'Got out, you old bum, or I'll fire you troo the door.'"

"You should have said buns. He, no doubt.—

"Bums? Dot's vot I said— bums; and den I comes and wants some red dishes, and you say to go auf der china store; I want some letters to ead and you say go mit der postoffice. I egspect of I want me some beets you tole me to go mit de station-house. I tell you vot I do, you can go to the tyfel. Of you vos a nice man, I vant some injins, und cowcumbers, und blendy dings, but I guess I go mit the drug store und buy a brick und beddles rat pizen."

The Society of Women.

One of the great benefits a young man may derive from woman's society is that he is bound to be respectful to them. The habit is of great good to moral young men, depend upon it. Our education makes of us the most eminently selfish men in the world. We fight for ourselves; we cut the best slice out of the joint at the club dinners for ourselves; we yawn for ourselves, and light our pipes, and say we won't go out; we prefer ourselves and our ease; and the greatest good that comes to a man from woman's society is that he has to think of somebody besides himself—somebody to whom he is bound to be constantly attentive and respectful.

I don't want my dear Bob to associate with those of the other sex whom he does not and cannot respect; that is worse than billiards, worse than smoking selfishly at home, but I vow I would rather see you turning over the leaves of Miss Middlecomb's music book all night than at billiards, or smoking, or brandy and water.

How Grapes Feed.

We had planted a row of Delaware vines, one of which was about three feet from a hole in which a quantity of bones had been buried. The vines all made healthy growth, but the one referred to was specially vigorous. This, however, we attributed to its general vigor, and not to any special influence, having forgotten all about the buried bones. But one day, after digging near this hole, we noticed that our healthy, vigorous vine was wilting, and in a few hours it was as completely wilted as if it had been pulled up by the roots and exposed to a hot sun. Unable to account for this strange circumstance, and suspecting some new enemy, we dug it up, carefully following all the shoots to their extremities.

To our surprise, however there was only one root of any consequence, and this led directly to the bones in the hole. Following it up, we came to where we had cut it, and there taking up the severed end, and following that we found that the parent root was one mass of roots. It was evident, therefore, that when first set out, one root had set off in the direction of the bones, and on reaching them, had found such a supply of nutriment that it alone was competent to carry to the vine all the food it wanted. The other root therefore dwindled away, or, at least, made but a trifling growth, and the vine, depending wholely upon the single root just described, perished when it was cut off.

We may add that the root was almost bare of fibrils, or branches, in its course from the vine to the bones, but once there, it divided and branched in every direction, running into the interior of the hollow bones, and clasping about internal and external surface with a perfect network of fibrils. To us it showed several points. Bones are evidently one of the best manures for the vine, and as we wish them to last for years they need not be broken up. As it is well to have the roots extend over a considerable space, bones or any other very rich manure should not be placed in holes, but distributed through the soil.

Advice to Young Ladies.

Ladies—caged birds of beautiful plumage, but sickly looks—pale pets of the parlor, who vegetate in an unhealthy atmosphere, like the potato germinating in a dark cellar, why do you not go into the open air and warm sunshine, and add lustre to your eyes, bloom to your cheeks, elasticity to your steps, and vigor to your frames? Take exercise; run up the hill on a wager, and down again for fun; roam the fields, climb the fences, leap over the ditches, wade the brooks, and, after a day of exhilerating exercise and unrestrained liberty, go home with an appetite acquired by healthy enjoyment. The beautiful blooming young lady—rosy cheeked and bright-eyed—who can darn a stocking, mend her own frock, command a regiment of pots and kettles, and be a lady when required, is a girl that young men are in quest of for a wife. But you pining, screwed up, wasp-wasted, doll-dressed, consumption-mortgaged, music-murdering, novel-devouring daughters of fashion and idleness, are no more fit for matrimony than a pullet is to look after a brood of fourteen chickens. The truth is, dear girls, that you want less fashionable restraint and more liberty of action; more kitchen and less parlor; more leg exercise and less sofa; more frankness and less mock modesty. Loosen your waist-strings, and breathe pure atmosphere, and become something as good and beautiful as nature desiged.

The English girl rides, walks, drives, rows upon the water, runs, dances, plays, sings, jumps the rope, throws the ball, hurls the quoit, draws the bow, keeps up the shuttlecock—and all this without having it forever upon her mind that she is thereby wasting her time. She does it every day until it becomes a habit which she will follow up through life. Her frame, as a natural consequence, is large, her muscular system in better subordination, her strength more enduring, and the whole tone of her mind healthier.

Care of Flowers in Winter.

A writer for Vick's Magazine says:—We have a good many things that one cannot find room for in the house during winter, and I wish to tell you my plans. Of course, things that are quite tender cannot be saved, but there are a few things that are not quite hardy at the North that, with very little trouble, may be saved as well as not. I dig a pit, say two feet in depth, and look well to the drainage, so that water will not settle into it during winter thaws, or in the spring. In the bottom of this I plant tritamas, carnations, and things that will bear a good deal of frost but are not quite able to stand our severe northern winters. I find it a good place to keep over young hollyhock plants and sometimes make a little bed of pansies in one corner. As soon as I have everything planted I cover the pit with boards loosely, leaving spaces between each for air. Over the boards I throw some straw or corn stalks, and when there happens to be a few fine days I remove a good part of the covering, and give the pit a regular airing, always taking advantage of a January thaw for this purpose. If I have an old sash or two I use them instead of the boards, for the sake of light. I have no trouble in keeping plants in such a pit, and I can pick pansy flowers from it nearly half the winter, and tritoma flowers may sometimes be had. Having derived so much benefit from a pit of this kind, I am very anxious that all lovers of flowers should enjoy its advantages.

However fond one may be of flowers, there will be days during the winter when the care of them will be irksome, as, with their rapid evaporation, they need unremitting care in our warm, dry rooms. For this reason, as well as for their more sightly appearance, we have preferred for some years to use window boxes for the major part of our plants, using pots only for specimen plants, or such as require some special care. Window boxes have the advantage of not only appearing well to our neighbors from the exterior, but also "furnish," as ladies would say. If properly started, with good porous earth, well mixed with sand or sawdust, they require but little attention, and will contain an astonishing number of plants.

"There's Nothing Like Them."

Davenport, Ia., June 2, 1881.

H. H. Warner & Co.: Sirs—I suffered for years with weak kidneys, biliousness and constipation. Your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure and Safe Pills relieved all these troubles; indeed there is nothing like them.

Mrs. Jennie F. Greeley.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Dear Sir: My wife has for several years been a great sufferer from periodical attacks of Neuralgia in the head. Several of the most eminent physicians had been called upon to treat her, but they could only give temporary relief.

About two years ago she commenced using the Taxaline, and I am glad to say, since then she has had no return of those terrible pains. I attribute her restoration to health entirely to the use of Taxaline, and sometimes would say to all who suffer that excruciating one, all pains to give Taxaline a trial. Yours, etc., L. Simon.

Jealousy.

Some poets have said many fine things of the damned, but the most of them agree that jealousy, that tyrant of the mind, is the hell of hells. This is grandly sweeping and magnificently inaccurate. Any sufferer from Indigestion knows to the contrary. Indigestion, the villian of the piece, is played upon the gastric juices of the stomach and does dance about the house in jealousy, and this is often all directed upon the latter, and when indigestion is removed, this jaundiced opinion of a deranged liver flies. Taraxine is the best known remedy extant for impaired digestion, deranged liver, and diseases of the bowels and kidneys.

A Report of Clerk of Circuit Court.

Clerk's Office, Johnson Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer: During the spring and summer my wife was a great sufferer from Indigestion and Dyspepsia, caused by a torpid liver. About a month ago she began using your Taxarine, and the first two doses gave her so much relief that she continued the use of it until two bottles had been taken, and I take pleasure in saying that her health is entirely restored.

Yours, etc., Isaac M. Thompson,

A young man dressed in the height of fashion, and with a poetic turn of mind, was driving along a country road, and upon gazing at the pond which skirted the highway, said: "Oh, how would I like to lave my heated head in those cooling waters!" An Irishman overhearing the exclamation immediately replied, "Bedad you might lave it there and it would not sink."

Perfect Success.

Those two words have a vast meaning when fully comprehended. A perfect success can be truthfully applied to Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic, which cures dyspepsia, biliousness, costiveness, all diseases of the kidneys, liver and bladder. It is a perfect tonic and blood purifier; it keeps the skin clear and bright, drives away pimples and makes the genera health excellent. Price 50 cents. Baker and Hall.

"Where to strike an attacking dog" is thus told by Land and Water: "When you have the good fortune to be armed with a shillelah, do not says General Hutchinson, hit him across the head and eyes; bear in mind that the front part of his forelegs is a far more vulnerable and sensitive spot. One or two well applied blows upon that unprotected place will generally disable the strongest dog."

Griggs' Glycerine Salve.

The best on earth can truly be said of Griggs' Glycerine Salve, which is a sure cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. Will positively cure piles, tetter and all skin eruptions. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Only 25 cents. For sale by Baker & Hall.

Sweet Infancy.—Hard must be the heart and selfish the mind which is not expanded and softened by communion with sweet infancy. The innocence of childhood is the tenderest and not the least potent remonstrance against the vices of grown man, if he would but listen to the lesson and take it to his heart.

Liver, Kidney and Bright's Disease.

A medicine that destroys the germ or cause of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Complaints, and has power to root them all out of the system, is above all price. Such a medicine is Hop Bitters, and positive proof of this can be found by one trial, or by asking your neighbors, who have been cured by it.

Talk of the bravery of the sterner sex. Do you remember the first time you asked her, "Will you take my arm?" While you trembled all over like the narrative of a stump-tail dog, and experienced the sensation of having swallowed your Adam's apple, what did she do? Why, she took your arm as coolly as she would eat a pickle.

The disagreeable operation of forcing liquids into the head, and the use of exciting snuffs, are being superseded by Ely's Cream Balm, a cure for Catarrh, Colds in the head and Hay Fever. Price 50 cents. Apply into nostrils with little finger.

After a thorough trial of Ely's Cream Balm I was entirely cured of Catarrh, also a roaring in my head which had continued for more than a year. James E. Crosson, Sexton at the Tabernacle, Paterson, N. J.

By far the best remedy for the treatment of Catarrh, Cold in the Head, Hay Fever, &c., is Ely's Cream Balm. The reports are all favorable and I do not hesitate to endorse it as superior to any and all other articles in the market. The Balm is pleasant and easy to use. F. M. Reasney, M. D. Jackson, Mich.

B. MINCER

NATIVE OF RUSSIA,

Scientific Optician,

Graduate Kiefer's Experience,

Who has been doing a large business at Adrian for a number of weeks, having testimonials from the [illegible] will be at

TECUMSEH, TUESDAY, MARCH 20, 1883.

The [illegible] construction of the eye [illegible] to correctness [illegible] B. Mincer, beside the [illegible] his special [illegible] has paid his entire attention to the adaption of spectacles to the same. Having a thorough experience in making and adapting spectacles to the eye, he is enabled to fit accurately in every case of abnormal vision, known as Presbyopia, Myopia, and Hypermetropia, as well as weak sight, requiring various tinted glasses. His improved Spectacles are a perfect construction which assists and preserves the sight, rendering frequent changes quite unnecessary. They confer a brilliancy and distinctness of vision with an amount of ease and comfort not generally enjoyed by persons using spectacles. His lenses are ground on the most scientific principles, rendering them as clear as when in the full strength of youth.

B. Mincer has some flattering testimonials of some of the leading citizens and oculists in the state, as to ability in fitting spectacles.

ADRIAN, Dec. 8, 1882.—To whom interested: Having for some time past used glasses to improve my sight, without satisfactorily gaining my object, I called on Mr. Mincer, optician, of Detroit, who readily adapted glasses to my eyes, with which I am so well pleased that I cheerfully speak in his favor. His method of examination, and its application in selecting glasses to fit the eye, can only be acquired by a knowledge of that useful organ to which must be added extensive experience. He has also adapted glasses to Mrs. Baker's eyes, with which she is well pleased. I recommend him to all who need glasses adapted to their wants. Poor glasses are an abomination.

V. A. BAKER, M.D.

ADRIAN, Dec. 21, 1882.—I have investigated the work of Mr. B. Mincer, optician. I have reason to believe that he understands his profession, and adjusts excellent glasses on scientific principles.

C. BYNE, M.D.

ADRIAN, Dec. 15, 1882.—I take pleasure in recommending Mr. Mincer's glasses as being of a very superior quality, and his method of fitting them to the eyes as the very best.

S. A. FOWERS.

ADRIAN, Nov. 18, 1882.

I have used spectacles bought of Mr. B. Mincer for the past three months, and find them superior to any I have ever used, and can cheerfully recommend him to any one in need of good glasses, and the benefit of his experience in the science of optics to adjust proper lenses.

DANIEL TODD, M.D.

We clip the following testimonials from the Bryan Press relative to the merits of B. Mincer's glasses, who has sold a large number of spectacles in this vicinity, and in every instance has given entire satisfaction:

ANGOLA, Ind., Dec. 13, 1879.

This will recommend to you Mr. B. Mincer, who has made this place a point for sale of glasses; from his long practice in this particular business he has perfected himself so as to readily adapt glasses to any condition of the eyes, and I recommend him as a first-class, thorough optician.

I. S. B. WILLIAMS, M.D.

NORENCI, Dec. 2, 1881.

I take pleasure in recommending all persons who need glasses to aid the eye, to use the kind furnished by Mr. Mincer, who is capable of fitting the eye with the very best quality.

REV. J. CRABBS.

LAKEFIELD, Mich., Dec. 10, 1881.

Mr. B. Mincer, optician, of Detroit, has occasionally visited this county, and has fitted me with a pair of glasses for myself; also my wife, with which we are much pleased, and would not part with them, and we take pleasure in recommending him to the public as a thorough optician and will fit any eye.

J. H. LAVERTY, M.D.

DELTA, Ohio, April 26, 1882.

I take pleasure in recommending all persons who are compelled to use glasses for weak eyes or any other affected by age, or by the use of poor glasses, to try B. Mincer, optician. I have purchased of him a pair of glasses which are the best I ever used.

S. T. WORDEN, M.D.

H. H. WARNER & CO.
ROCHESTER, N.Y.

This remedy is an absolute specific for the diseases of women; for the nervous troubles of youth, and for the debility which precedes old age. As statistics show that all disease arises from the Kidneys or Liver, we can guarantee freedom from disease by reason of the power which our Safe Kidney and Liver Cure possesses over these organs. For Diabetes ask for Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure.

K. B

KING OF THE BLOOD.

The Most Thorough Purifier of the Blood Yet Discovered.

Cures all Humors, from a Common Eruption to the worst Scrofula.

It purifies the Blood.
It invigorates the Liver.
It regulates the Bowels.
It strengthens the stomach.
It gives vivacity in place of lassitude; cheerfulness in place of gloom, and robust vigor in place of debility.

Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Disordered Liver, Constipation, Nervous Affections, General Debility, in short all the numerous diseases and discomforts caused by impure blood are speedily conquered by this powerful corrector, the chief and sovereign of all ancient or modern medical discoveries—KING OF THE BLOOD.

Its name is its best description as it is a royal dispenser of the blessings of health and vanquishes the foes that lurk in the blood.

It banishes PIMPLES, SALT RHEUM, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, FEVER SORES, and all SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

It checks CONSUMPTION in its early stages. It has frequently cured it when advanced.

It disperses TUMORS and CANCERS without the surgeon's knife.

It cures DROPSY, general or partial.

It cures FEMALE WEAKNESS and DISEASE.

It reduces in a safe and effectual manner all swellings, external or internal.

It eradicates the effects of Venerial Disease and Mineral Poisons, and establishes a sound constitution.

Many certificates, much further information and full directions for using, will be found in the pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," in which each bottle is enclosed.

Price $1 per bottle, containing 12 ounces, or 50 to 50 doses. Sold by dealers in medicine.

If your druggist does not happen to have it on hand, request him to order a supply of it for you, as it will be cheaper than for you to order direct of us, and less trouble.

THE LOST CHILD.

A FATE WORSE THAN ABDUCTION.

How Parents, by a Lack of Precaution and Care, are Responsible for the Death of Their Children.

(Camden, Me., Herald.)

The moral and legal responsibility of parents in the care of their children is, fortunately, attracting the serious attention of the better portion of the entire country. The many instances of child beating, oppression, and other forms of cruelty which come to light, demand that something be done, and it is gratifying to know that the people are becoming thoroughly aroused.—Whether the cruelty be in the form of physical violence or physical neglect matters not — the principal in both cases is the same. The man or woman who neglects his or her own health may be pardoned, as the consequences fall upon the individual alone; but the inroads of disease upon the innocent ones dependent upon him for protection, is criminally liable in the sight of God, however he may appear in the eyes of men. There are, however, parents that intend to care for their children, but who through carelessness or the urgency of other duties, permit them to become the innocent victims of disease. Such parents may be guiltless of intentional wrong, but the disastrous results upon their children are just as great.

These are truths which must be manifest to every worthy parent and especially in a vicinity where the unknown effects of the atmosphere, the water and the general tendency to malaria are so great. There are many families in this locality who have been called upon to mourn untimely losses, even when the greatest care was exercised; but the experience of one only will be given: It is that of the late W. O. Thomas. The children were all most promising, but for some unexplained reason their health and strength seemed to gradually lessen until their friends feared they were the victims of consumption. One by one, they sickened and died until three had departed and two of the surviving brothers were also taken ill. Their names were Hermon and Edward. Hermon, however, seemed the stronger of the two; and, while his younger brother was confined to the house constantly, and to his bed much of the time, Hermon was able to be about but in so weak a condition that he had no desire to play. Eddie's symptoms were terrible! He found difficulty in retaining food upon his stomach, was restless and irritable, and out of his head frequently. At various times three different physicians visited him; each one told his friends he could not live. He finally got so low that death was only considered a matter of a few days. At that critical time his elder brothers, aroused almost to the pitch of desperation by the three deaths that had so recently occurred, and the other one staring them in the face, resolved to take the case into their own hands. They accordingly did so, and secured a remedy that was then being universally used, and began giving it to him. Its effect at first was slight, but any improvement was considered a good symptom. By degrees his strength returned; he was able to eat with a relish, then walk about the house; and finally he regained complete health and strength. The boy was so rejoiced over his recovery that, accompanied by the editor of this paper, he went before Justice Charles K. Miller and made oath to the facts of his sickness as above related, and that he was restored to perfect health by the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Now, Edward Thomas's parents, while they lived, undoubtedly, provided faithfully for the wants of all their children; and yet the seed of disease had taken deep root. Their care in one direction had been counteracted by unknown carelessness in another. Their love was sincere, but wholly misdirected. They should have known that children are just as liable to kidney and liver diseases as grown up people; and that the fatality of Bright's disease of the kidneys is just as great among little children as with adults. This is a serious subject. Hereditary traits: the after consequences of measles and scarlet fever, diphtheria and the passing troubles which so easily become chronic, all the greatest care and caution. No case of cholera infantum, measles, scarletina or diphtheria was ever virulent while the child's kidneys were healthy. Would simply be an impossibility. These important organs of the body are just forming within the child and growing with its growth; and they can be trained to strength and health as readily as the little mind can be trained to truth and uprightness.

The importance of carefully watching the slightest troubles of the child, and especially those effecting the kidneys and liver, cannot be too strongly emphasized. Children respond so readily to the proper remedies and are so sensitive to disease, that it is a sin to deprive them of one at the risk of incurring the other. By a judicious treatment these essential organs can be developed so that a strong constitution, able to resist the inroads of disease through coming years, shall be the result.

YOUR ATTENTION!—We hope our readers will not skip the advertisements, but peruse them carefully. It will be found in all cases that those advertising mean business. They are not content to stand by the wayside and spend all their time, which should be devoted to selling and buying, in merely making known to passers-by what they have to sell, but instead of using their own lungs they make use of the inexhaustable lungs of the Press.

A Free Acknowledgement.

I hereby certify that I habitually use Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" in my family in all those cases in which a domestic medicine is needed, and that it has never yet failed to accomplish the purpose desired. We look upon it as an anchor to windward that is sure to hold in every instance mentioned on the Doctor's bill of particulars. I make this acknowledgement freely, in the hope of doing good to others, feeling that a medicine that is near at hand and to be implicitly trusted is worth more than it costs. Rev. G. C. Estay,

POPULAR SONGS.

Origin and Authorship of Some of the Most Famous.

Cincinnati Enquirer.

"The Old Oaken Bucket" was written by Woodworth in New York city during the hot summer of 1817. He came into the house and drank a glass of water, and then said, "How much more refreshing it would be to take a good long drink from the old oaken bucket that used to hang in my father's well." His wife heard the remark, and suggested that it was a happy thought for a poem. He went and wrote the song as we have it. "Woodman, Spare That Tree," was the result of an incident that happened to George P. Morris. A friend's mother had given a little place in the country which she was obliged, from poverty, to sell. On the place grew a huge oak which had been planted by his grandfather. The purchaser of the house and land proposed to cut down the tree, and Morris' friend paid him $10 for a bond that the oak should be spared. Morris heard the story and [illegible] the song [illegible] "Old Dog Tray," of which 125,000 copies were sold in the first eighteen months after its publication, was written by Foster on a piece of brown wrapping paper in the back room of a grocery store, where he was fond of lounging. Poor Foster's last days were extremely unhappy. He lived in New York, personally a stranger, but known to, every one through his songs.

Foster's "Old Folks at Home" was the best song he ever wrote. Over 400,000 copies were sold by the firm that first published it, and the author is said to have received $15,000 for his share of the sale. The idea of writing negro melodies occurred to Foster from seeing what pleasure was given by the crude absurdities presented in his time by the minstrels. He thought he could do better. "Kathleen Mavourneen" was sold by Crouch, the author, for $25, and brought the publishers as many thousands. Crouch was hopelessly improvident, and in his latter days became a tramp. When Mad. Titiens was in this country a number of years ago she sung "Kathleen Mavourneen," in New York, when a dirty tramp introduced himself as Crouch, was recognized, and thanked her for singing the song so well. "Bonnie Doon" was the only English song that the Emperor Napoleon liked. He detested all the music of Britain, and at St. Helena said that it was the only tolerable composition the English had ever produced. "I'll Hang My Harp on a Willow Tree," is said to have been the composition of a young English nobleman who had fallen hopelessly in love with the Princess Victoria. When she succeeded to the throne he gave up in despair and wrote this famous ballad. "Annie Laurie" is 200 years old, and was the production of a man named Douglass to celebrate the praise of a girl named Laurie. The lady afterward, with true feminine inconstancy, deserted the man who made her famous and married another man named Ferguson.

The Mining Prospector.

The genus prospector, a man of medium height, a rather lightly, but firmly knit frame, age anywhere between 25 and 35, a fine face, gentle but firm, bronzed with exposure to many a fierce storm, stamped with that unmistakable expression impressed on the features of those who, day after day, stand face to face with danger and death, a face that a girl in distress will turn to without hesitation; that a rowdy will turn from with fear and hatred. His first movement betrays the frontiersman. A rapid piercing glance around the park; neither human foe nor edible game being in sight, his next glance is to the sky. Apparently satisfied with the inspection, his first care is to attend to his jack, or "burro," to use the mountain phrase; then, having liberated the burro with a drag on the end of his rope which will effectually prevent his straying from that park, he turns to his fire, blows it into a blaze, puts on his coffee-pot to boil, and then to his toilet. Three inches of comb, two square inches of looking glass, a coarse towel, a piece of yellow soap, a tooth brush and the toilet table is furnished. Now follow him to the dressing-room; a dozen steps down the creek takes him to where a little dam has formed a crystal pool. Down on the moss-covered rocks goes the broad, white hat, the collar of the blue flannel shirt is rolled back disclosing the neck and chest of an athlete. Oh how cold, how refreshing, how invigorating that water is fresh from the snow above. The toilet finished, breakfast is the next consideration. The coffee having boiled is placed on one side to settle, the bacon fried, the batter for a pile of "slap-jacks" beaten up, he fries one of the abominations, throwing it into the air and catching it on the reversed side with the precision of an old timer, and now he plunges into the tent and emerges with the "chuck box," or in English, "mess chest," into the inmost recesses of which he dives, and from conglomeration of cartridges, buckskin thongs, steel traps, needles and thread, sailor's palm, mineral specimens, three or four letters, a Seaside Library book very torn and dirty, a pair of Mexican spurs, odds and ends of strings, etc., produces a small canvas sack of salt, ditto of sugar, half a gallon can of syrup, and breakfast is ready and the table is set. To dispatch the meal takes but a little while. Short as the time is, however, it is not wasted, for observe the upturned face, the eager searching glance, peak after peak is scanned, formation, color noted, until apparently satisfied with the inspection. The meal is finished, plate and cup washed and put away; the morning pipe is lit and smoked while he goes through his pockets to see if his outfit is complete, matches, compass, knife, magnifying glass, all safe. Catching up the burro and picketing him on fresh grass finishes the morning chores and we are ready for the day's work.

An Iron Watch.

S. A. Lettimore in The Continent.

At a recent fair held in Worcestershire, Messrs. Crowther Brothers & Co. exhibited a watch, in perfect running order, constructed wholly of iron. The object of this curiosity was to illustrate the malleability of iron and its consequent adaptation to a wide variety of novel uses, especially as an advantageous substitute for glass in a number of domestic articles. Such articles when made of thin iron plate possess the two desirable properties of strength and lightness, while elegance of form is far more easily attained. Such articles may be easily electro-plated with silver, gold, nickel, platinum, or adorned with all the beauty of the enameler's art.

Rest, Sleep, Worry and Work.

Philadelphia Press.

Over-work will shorten life at any period. Children should be brought up to play, not to work. Work should begin only when all the faculties, mental and physical, are developed. Brain work will kill more quickly than manual labor. Three hours of brain work are equal to seven hours of manual labor, in the consumption of vital tissues. Men should work six days and rest one. Sleep is necessary to all persons. We can scarcely sleep too much. Grown people should sleep seven or eight hours in every twenty four. Children should sleep so long as they want to, ten hours at least. Worry kills more people than work.

Nearly a Terrible Loss.

It was at the shore, and a gentleman was chatting on his cottage porch with two or three guests. His pretty daughter came up from the beach, just out of the surf. "O papa," she exclaimed, "only think; I was nearly drowned." Papa, pathetically to his friends, "Gentlemen, do you hear that? I have spent more than five thousand dollars on that girl's education, and to-day she was nearly drowned."

Valley Developments.

Sandersville (Ga.) Mercury.

An old lady from one of the rural districts astonished a clerk in one of the stores by inquiring if he had any "valley developments such as they did up letters in."

Keep Busy.

In no place in our columns can we better give this advice than here. Men, says Dr. Hall, who have half a dozen irons in the fire, are not the ones who go crazy. It is the man of voluntary or compelled leisure who mopes, and pines, and thinks himself into the mad-house or the grave. Motion is all nature's law. Action is man's salvation, physical and mental. And yet, nine of ten are wistfully looking forward to the coveted hour when they shall have leisure to do nothing or something only if they feel like it—the very siren that has lured to death many a [illegible] man. Rarely is truly wise who lays himself out to work till life's latest hour, and that is the man who will live the longest, and will live to the most purpose.

AN EXTRAORDINARY CASE.

[illegible] Feb. 20th, 1880.

To Mr. J. W. Gibson, Druggist:

Dear Sir.—My case was an acute form of bronchitis, and was of one and [illegible] standing. Your medicines did possible, but failed [illegible] until the doctors said I would die. My case was incurable. Thrown upon my own resources, I got a bottle of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, and in six hours felt a decided relief. In three days the cough almost disappeared. Now that my chances of life are good for many years, I earnestly recommend the above to every sufferer of lung or throat disease.

Sleep for Children.

There is no danger that children can sleep to much. The old proverb, "he who sleeps, eats," is illustrated in those little ones who sleep most. Wakeful children are almost always peevish, irritable and lean. If they can be induced to sleep abundantly, they are quite likely to become good-natured and plump. Their sleep should be as much during the hours of darkness as possible, and therefore it is better that they should go to bed before sunset to have their sleep out, than to lie long after sunrise in the morning. It is well to let any healthfull, growing child or young person sleep until he wakes himself, and give him such variety and amount of out-door exercise as shall make him glad when bedtime returns.

In Good Spirits.

T. Walker, Cleveland, O., writes:—"For the last twelve months I have suffered with lumbago and general debility. I commenced taking Burdock Blood Bitters about six weeks ago, and now have great pleasure in stating that I have recovered my appetite, my complexion has grown ruddy, and feel better altogether." Price $1.00.

WHAT SCARES A WOMAN.—Notice a woman when she receives a telegram. How it does scare her! She trembles like a dish of jelly, and imagines all sorts of things. Her husband has fallen down the hatchway at his warehouse. Her Johnny has gone out sailing and is drowned. Her sister has been scalded to death. Nothing short of a fatal accident fills the bill of her imagination. When she finds courage enough to tear open the envelope and finds a message from her husband warning her he will bring a customer home for dinner, then she calls together her children and instructs them not to ask twice for raspberries, as there are only enough to go around and give the visitor a few extra.

A Forlorn Hope.

Otto J. Doesburg, proprietor Holland City News, Mich., writes: "A bad cold settled on my side and back, kidney trouble, liver and rheumatism combined; I suffered terribly, though was obliged to move about and attend to business. I tried local doctors, but receiv'd no relief, and as a forlorn hope tried your Thomas' Eclectric Oil; have only used half a fifty cent bottle, and feel as well as I ever did in my life.

The other day, on a railroad car, a conductor had a smile for the little children, offered kindly to help the feeble women, and benefitted all by the clear tones in which he called out the names of the stations. A stupid man got on the wrong train, and a stupid woman neglected to get off at the right time; but for both this conductor stopped the cars with an unruffled face and no act of petulant insult. The day before he had taken his part in the prayers and songs of the little church where he lived, and there was where his strength came from. Nowhere is christianity more needed than in the steamboat or railroad car, and nowhere, therefore, is Christ more ready to help us.

It doesn't take much of a mathematician to count flies; but, for fear that some of our readers may not know what a fly is, and how they are weighed, we append the following table. Green-grocers will find it an excellent authority for weighing butter: 162 house flies one ounce; 2,592 house flies one pound; 259,200 house flies one hundred-weight; 5,184,000 house flies one ton. The reader may extract some consolation by pasting this on the bedroom wall and studying it at night.

Autumn, winter and spring were all represented in last Sunday's weather.

Wiggins storm got side-tracked somewhere and was delayed a week. That's all.

It will now be in order for Mr. Wiggins to predict a hot spell of weather about next harvest time.

David Davis has got married at last. It will now be in order for some one to nominate him for the presidency in 1884.

Divorces in America and dynamite in Europe are stirring up society and politics. One is about as damaging as the other.

Fifteen years ago this month a big snow fall of four feet occurred. The temperature however was not as low as on last Monday and Tuesday.

The oldest inhabitant is again put to his trumps to remember the time when ten below zero weather has struck this latitude on the 20th day of March.

For diversified industry these United States take the cake. The ice is twenty feet thick at Macinaw, and corn is two feet high in Southern Texas.

Adrian having decided to establish water works is now in search of a water supply. If this weather continues they could melt snow for this season's supply.

The late Gov. Stephens, of Georgia, occupied for years the same rooms in Washington at the National Hotel, the identical rooms which were used by Henry Clay.

Congressman Flower, of New York, has covered $400 of his salary into the U. S. treasury, being the proportion for thirty days absence from duty. Flowers of this kind are exceedingly rare at Washington.

There is a good deal of pointer to the square inch down in Rhode Island now. Ex Gov. Sprague has been nominated by the Independents and endorsed by the Democrats and "Little Rhody" is being stirred up clear to the bottom.

The Maclean libel suit against the Evening News was called last Monday. Owing to the sudden death of Dr. Farrand, one of Maclean's witnesses, and sickness in Col. Atkinson's family, of counsel for the defense, the case was postponed by mutual consent for one week.

Prof. Beal, of Lansing, advocates the collection of road taxes in money. This is the Ohio system, and many counties in that state have excellent gravel roads. The present hap-hazard system of "road work" now in vogue in this state, should certainly be reformed in some way.

Gov. Butler's veto message shows a peculiar state affairs in Massachusetts. In the reformatory prison for women the salaries are over 91 per cent of the total appropriation for carrying on the institution. Of the amount appropriated for the Reform School for Boys, $20,000 is for salaries and $15,000 for other expenses.

The Lansing Journal in speaking of Mr. O'Brien, one of the candidates for Judge on the Republican ticket, says. "Mr. O'Brien's nomination is the reverse of that of Governor Blair. He is young in years and professional service, unknown to the masses of the people of the state, is distant and aristocratic in manner and feeling, and is the servile tool of a great railroad corporation. We fervently hope that no such calamity awaits the people of Michigan as the election of this railroad attorney to the supreme court."

The system of building levees on the banks of the Mississippi is all wrong. The great river cannot be penned in nor dammed up. On this subject the Memphis Avalanche wisely says:

"The Mississippi at flood tide is a power that cannot be controlled by mud banks, and we must accept the situation and regulate it as we may. Instead of closing up the outlets, they should be opened out in every direction wherever there is a chance to let out some of the superabundant water. Sooner or later experience will teach that the theory of confining the flood waters to one channel must be abandoned.

A PROGRESSIVE PLATFORM.

A friend of ours has handed us the following platform of principles which he thinks the honest men of both parties could stand upon. Although we could criticise one or two planks in this platform, still as a whole, it is a good one; and if the people are ever to secure their rights, political parties must be reorganized at an early day on a platform similar to this one.

PREAMBLE.

WHEREAS, The alarming tendency of the co-operative centralization of capital for political power, the increase of departments and official positions, augmenting salaries, and a system to this end, requiring a high tariff internal revenue and general taxation, the tying up of material wealth from its legitimate channels of promoting health, intelligence, general prosperity and bliss, thereby oppressing the productive industries.

AND WHEREAS, The leading political parties are under the control of this money power and are becoming oppressive monopolies.

Therefore, To meet the demands of the times, it becomes the duty of the masses to renew their declarations of principles, and be ever cautious in the selection of public servants, remembering that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES.

1st. An amendment to the national constitution, providing for the election of President, Vice President and United States Senators by direct vote of the people. In the national canvass for President and Vice President each state to be counted according to its representatives in Congress. Also fixing the salaries of each of the above, including representatives in Congress, Judges of the Supreme Court and heads of all government departments.

2d. A practical tariff, being prejudicial to the world's progress, and from the great expense attending collections, mainly renumerative to capitalists, therefore a gradual approach to free trade is desirable.

3d. Equal and exact justice demands an amendment to the national constitution, granting equal suffrage and eligibility to office without distinction of race, property or sex.

4th. The gradual increase of crime, enlargement of prisons, poorhouses and asylums are evidence of defective organic law, therefore an amendment to the national constitution, prohibiting the manufacture, sale, importation and exportation of all alcoholic beverages is desirable, with a view of raising the moral and intellectual standard, lessening the incentives to crime and diminishing the great expense of our judicial system, which is mainly conspicuous for keeping humanity in a perpetual broil.

5th. High official salaries having a tendency to corrupt the entire political fabric, a reduction is seemingly indispensable, so that the net earnings, rank for rank, shall not exceed those of other industries; it requiring no greater skill or intelligence in discharging official duties, than extending the arts and sciences and manipulating the varied mechanical and agricultural machinery.

6th. National banks being untaxed, and their issues not a legal tender, and having the power of controlling the circulating medium, therefore an amendment is desirable, abolishing the national banking system and all individual or co-operative banking, except exchange brokers, and fixing the amount of circulating medium in time of peace at twenty dollars per capita, the same to consist of the free coinage of gold and silver and legal tender treasury notes.

7th. The payment of the national debt as fast as it becomes due, instead of building vaults to hold the specie that is flowing into the treasury, and no issuing of bonds or refunding.

8th. The regulation of internal commerce by Congress so as to prevent unjust carrying rates and exorbitant discrimination in local freights.

9th. The adjustment of the patent laws so as to protect the innocent purchaser against prosecution.

10th. Sectarian control in matters of government being dangerous to liberty and scientific research, therefore mormonism or polygamy should be forever prohibited.

11th. The establishment of a system of free schools for the universal education of all the youth of the land between the ages of six and fourteen years. Protection against subjecting children under fourteen years of age to manual labor, except sufficient to promote physical and mental growth.

12th. Conducting the government and all of its institutions with a view of promoting true political economy and advancing a knowledge of the arts and science and society morals, independent of sectarianism, at the same time giving each sect ample protection in individual forms of religion.

13th. Sufficient legal enactments to carry out the spirit and letter of the foregoing declarations.

A $20.00 Biblical Reward.

The publishers of Rutledge's Monthly offer twelve valuable rewards in their Monthly for April, among which is the following:

We will give $20 in gold to the person telling us how many verses there are in the Old Testament Scriptures by April, 10th, 1883. Should two or more correct answers be received, the reward will be divided. The money will be forwarded to the winners April 16th, 1883. Persons trying for the reward must send 20 cents in silver (no postage stamps taken) with their answer, for which they will receive the May Monthly, in which the name and address of the winner of the reward and the correct answer will be published, and in which several more valuable rewards will be offered. Address Rutledge Publishing Co., Easton, Pa.

Two prominent citizens of Adrian who used coal out of the same bin got into a law suit and one of them obtained a judgment against the other for 182 pounds of coal. Another effect of the severe winter.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, March 20th, 1883.

Any one living outside of New York have no idea how the boxing mania has seized upon the popular fancy. Young men and old men, laborers and professional men are all able to discuss the merits of the gladiators, and the number of these trying to fit themselves for the art of handling their "dukes" by a course of boxing lessons is legion. Women and girls too have caught the fever. In a quiet side street just off Sixth Avenue one of the professional female boxers who used to display her science at Harry Hill's so-called sporting theatre has opened a gymnasium for ladies. She is an Englishwoman of about 35 years, massive in proportions, a hard hitter, and despite her weight agile as a cat. I believe she was born near a colliery in the north of England and learned the "noble art" in many a hard fought battle with the semi-brutal roughs that can always be found in the vicinity of mines. Her gymnasium has not been open very long, but she already boasts of a renumerative number of pupils. Do not suppose that the ladies who take lessons from her come from her own walk of life. On the contrary, they're nearly all rich and cultured young women, who in their idleness have ruminated upon the conversations of their brothers, husbands and perhaps fathers, on the prowess of the Slades, the Maces, the Sullivans, the Edwards, and the lesser lights of the P. R., and then seized with a desire of going and doing likewise.

Sahni Morse is untertrified. He was discharged on the complaint that he had given a public performance without having secured a license. Now he says that he will produce his "service" in his "church" without a license. He declares it an outrage that he should be compelled to obtain a license when Dr. Talmage, Brother Barnes and other sensationalists are free to do as they please. "But don't you see," he exclaimed excitedly in a manner which was intended to be humorous however, "how heaven visits those who have persecuted me? There Ex-Mayor Grace falls from his carriage; Wm. E. Dodge dies suddenly; what next? I am going to produce the Passion, and all the cant in the world shall not stop me."

There is every indication that the summer exodus to Europe will be very large, fully as heavy as last year, and that was enormous. The Cunard, White Star, Inman and other favorite lines have been doing advance booking for weeks past. Most of the berths are engaged for May and June, and so far as the fashionable steamers are concerned, such as the Arizona, the Gallia, the Germanic, etc. I do not think that they have a stateroom unengaged for those two months. It strikes me that something ought to be done to provide a proper means of escape in case of any kind of accident. I am assured by people in a position to know, at all events not one Trans-Atlantic steamer carries a sufficient number of life boats to accommodate the entire crew and the enormous number of passengers usually carried, should it be necessary for them to leave the vessel simultaneously. Of course sailors are always capable of rigging up something in case of emergency, but it is not comforting to know that at a critical moment one's life may have to be trusted to a makeshift.

For the last three days we have had the most charming spring weather imaginable. The sparrows, who seem to have been reinforced by emigration from Massachusetts where they have been outlawed, are superabundant, and nearly every morning I have been awakened by their vociferous chirping on the trees in front of my window. The tramps too have reappeared from their winter lurking places, and bask themselves on the benches in the public parks. The former German professor with blue spectacles, who addresses you in a half dozen different languages, the ex-army officer, and the thoroughbred degraded bum, who seems not to have been born, but to have grown up on some heap of refuse. Soon they will leave town and go on their usual summer pilgrimage through the country, working when they must, and begging when they can, but enjoying themselves thoroughly. For business people this mild weather is a godsend. The spring trade in fancy goods, millinery, dressmaking, etc., has been wretchedly bad thus far. The prolonged cold and wet has made the warmest kind of wraps indispensable, and as to looking nice, as all ladies like to do, it was impossible when rain and slush ruined everything except rubber cloaks. The fear now is, however, that the weather will grow so warm at once that there will be no time for the shop-keepers to dispose of their stock. It's an ill wind that blows nobody any good, for should the warmth maintain itself, there will be no need of investing in a new eight dollar silk hat. The shapes are excruciating and calculated to break the hearts of modest young men. All that is wanting is that the hatters put huge silver buckles on the band, and then we will have a perfect fac simile of the style in vogue in the Incroyable days in the early part of the century.

They had two lengthy interviews with Dr. Roosa which were entirely satisfactory. The weather was delightful during their stay in New York and the trip was a very pleasant one throughout. They left on Monday afternoon and arrived home safe and sound on Saturday noon.

Miss Anna Brewer, whose serious illness was announced last week, passed on to the better land last Friday. Her untimely death will be a severe blow to the widowed mother, who needed the consolation and help of a faithful daughter. The deceased was an ornament to society and among the most highly esteemed young ladies of our village. She will not only be missed in the family circle but will be sincerely mourned by the entire community. The funeral services were held at Mrs. Brewer's family residence on Monday afternoon last and were attended by a large and sympathetic concourse of friends.

OUR PUBLIC LIBRARY.

The HERALD in a recent issue called attention to the fact that a project was under way to establish a public library in the village of Tecumseh.

The committee to solicit subscriptions to the capital stock, which was divided into shares of five dollars each, have succeeded so well that the establishment of a good library is beyond question. Already 120 shares have been taken, and the committee have decided to call the subscribers together to effect a permanent organization, elect officers &c. A meeting for this purpose will be held one week from to-night, on Thursday, March 29, at 7:30 o'clock P. M., at Dr. House & Jones' office. Every subscriber to stock will be entitled to one vote for each share, and are eligible to office.

The committee propose to increase the number of shares to 200 if possible before the meeting, and they earnestly solicit any person who is interested in the matter of providing healthy and instructive reading for our people, young and old, to help forward this enterprise by subscribing for stock. You can find a subscription paper at the postoffice where Miss Jennie Rosecrans will be pleased to receive your name for one or more shares. All subscribers taking five shares become life members. Below we publish a list of subscribers for the shares already taken.

Vincent Chapman returned from a visit to Indianapolis last Saturday.

We are glad to learn that C. J. Brewer is happoving rapidly and will soon be out again.

Rev. H. Shepard was called yesterday by telegram to attend the funeral of Dr. Kent, of Bryan, Ohio.

The well known dry goods firm of Cesup, Morrill, & Camp, "the old firm" of Jackson, have made an assignment. Extent of embarrassment not known.

The social club will be held at the residence of Mrs. E. A. Tribou next Monday evening. The last meeting was held at the residence of Mrs. W. T. Eccles, and all enjoyed a pleasant evening.

The Board of Supervisors is engaged in allowing claims and settling up the year's business. Nothing is likely to be done regarding the building of the court house, but there seems to be a disposition to levy a tax and raise some funds before the work is undertaken.

Zacharias Cook, of Raisin, is very seriously ill at Chicago, whither he went early this month to visit friends. A letter received yesterday from his son, James Cook says there is no special change in his condition, but the physicians are hopeful of his recovery.

Adrian Times: Some wag of the city justice courts has fixed up the following noms de plume for officers Johnson, Jibb and Hyde respectfully, according to the particular direction in which each has developed the most professional ability: "Section 53, compiled laws," "session laws of '81," and "section 153, compiled laws." The curious can "look it up."

Henry Gordon,

Teacher of singing, offers his services to the people of Tecumseh and vicinity. Those wishing to be able to sing intelligently in church and public gatherings can obtain the needed instruction in the public singing class just organized. Those wishing special advancement can receive it in private lessons, the same instruction given in our best musical conservatories. Instruction also given in piano, organ and harmony. We refer to Rev. R. S. Pardington, Rev. Jesse Kilpatrick, Ridgeway; Rev. A. W. Wilson, Franklin.

We trust that all persons, whose names appear upon the foregoing committees will feel it their duty to attend the examinations. And we hope also that no person will remain away because his name does not appear on the list. All patrons and friends of the schools are earnestly requested to be present.

Michael Wilson brought in a sample of the best maple sugar we have struck in some time. His syrup is also good.

N. M. Sutton returned from his Florida trip, yesterday, feeling in good health and spirits. Had he expected to strike such weather, he would have probably prolonged his stay a month or so.

Adrian Record: Representative Bixby's bill to regulate the liability of employers to their workmen was before the house yesterday for the third time, and after discussion was laid by for future consideration. It may be of interest to state that recently Wendell Phillips went before the Massachusetts Legislature in advocacy of some measure that should embody essentially the very provisions of Mr. Bixby's bill. The recklessness of railroad companies concerning the lives of their employers, and their readiness to award damages sustained in pursuance of their duties doubtless suggested the Bixby bill.

DIED.

MILLS. At Macon, Mich., March 14, 1883, Mr. Charles Eugene Mills in the 25th year of his age.

His life was spent chiefly on the farm at home, or with his uncle, Granville Mills. He was industrious, persevering, honest, kind hearted and generous to a fault. His sickness for three months was of a painful and trying nature, and yet he bore up with fortitude and without a utterance of complaint. It is no disparagement to a large circle of young men of Macon, to say that he will be missed as much as any. But our loss is his gain and by this comfortable and rational assurance, his family and the large concourse of friends who thus testified the hold our brother had on them, are comforted. The funeral was held at the home of his parents, Mr. & Mrs. Isaac C. Mills, on Friday, the 16th inst., with appropriate services by Rev. Mr. Shepard, of Tecumseh. "Rest brother in peace."

H. S.

WESTCOTT. In Tecumseh, Sunday night, the 18th inst., Mr. Hiram Westcott, in the 63d year of his age.

Mr. Westcott was born in Perry, Pennsylvania, the 5th day of March, 1820, came to Tecumseh in 1837, and hence his resided here since he was seventeen years of age, or nearly 46 years. He was an industrious, hard working man, faithful to his convictions, and to friends honest and ready always to lend a helping hand. He was married Feb. 6th, 1842 to Miss Minerva Simmons. Six children have grown up in the family to manhood and womanhood's estate, and one of them has preceded him to the better land. He will be missed at home and among a circle of friends. But his sufferings are ended, his toils are over, and all tears shall be wiped from off all faces, and there shall be no more pain."

Dr. Willoughby, the attending physician at the Sisters' Hospital and one of Buffalo's most [illegible] the profession, has used it for years, and says:

BUFFALO, Aug. 17, 1882.

Dr. Rush's Medical Association:
Dear Doctors—I unhesitatingly add my name to the long list of regular practitioners who have recommended your "Specific for Consumption." I have used it for many years in my practice for all pulmonary affections, and have always been most highly satisfied with the results. I consider it the best compound known for all lung diseases.
Yours, M. WILLOUGHBY, M. D.

Wm. G. Osgoodby, the well-known safe manufacturer of Buffalo, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Newark, and Atlanta, says:

Office of Osgoodby's Improved Safes,
17 South Broad Street,
ATLANTA, Ga., Oct. 17th, 1881.

Dr. Rush's Medical Association:
Dear Doctors—The three bottles of Dr. Rush's Regulator I ordered were received by express last night. I have taken nearly one bottle, and am highly satisfied with the result. For over two years I have been troubled with sharp pain at my heart. My physician, upon examination, pronounced it enlargement of the heart, and was unable to give me any relief. The trouble grew worse, and I had become convinced that I could not live. While in New York City last week, I called on one of the most prominent physicians there, who charged me $25 for an examination and then recommended your "Regulator." Knowing you to be a regular Medical Association, and not a patent medicine scheme, I ordered the three bottles. I have not been troubled since I commenced taking it, but shall continue and take the entire three bottles so as to obtain a permanent cure. You have my sincere thanks. I am, gentlemen,
Very respectfully,
WM. G. OSGOODBY

Cured of Rheumatism in Two Hours.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 2, 1882.

Dr. Rush's Medical Association:
Gentlemen—I have been troubled with rheumatism for two years. I tried all the best advertised cures and finally consulted many first-class physicians without relief. The last doctor I applied to recommended "Dr. Rush's Blood Root Oil." I purchased a large bottle for 50 cents and applied it. In two hours I was relieved, and now am entirely well. It effects a speedy cure, and I believe it the only thing that will cure rheumatism.
Truly yours,
JOHN H. ROBINSON

Dickens as a Pedestrian.

"Are you a good walker?" inquired the English friend who drove me to the station from which I was to start for Gad's Hill, on my first visit to Charles Dickens. "Pretty fair," I replied, with that American confidence in the ability to do anything which has made my country famous. "All right," responded my friend, with a quizzical glance at the thin-soled gaiters affected by New Yorkers in 1886—a glance that I did not thoroughly appreciate until forty-eight hours afterwards, in my room at Gad's Hill place, when I painfully peeled those very gaiters off from my swollen, burning and painful feet. During that interval I had met Charles Dickens, and we had taken one of his famous walks. Professional pedestrians, then, may be a more enthusiastic, indefatigable tribe than Dickens. He loved walking for its own sake, he practiced it for its beneficial effects upon his health, he utilized it as a means of observation, he preferred it to any other method of locomotion, he found in it rest, recreation, and intellectual enjoyment. To ask you to walk with him, in town or country, was the highest compliment that he could pay to any man who paid so few compliments. And those walks! Many are the happy hours along London streets and Rochester roads, that memory now tenderly recalls; but these pleasures do not obliterate the recollection of the exquisite pedestrian pains that followed my first walk with Dickens. There was nothing, except my friend's tentative question at the station, to prepare me for the sacrifice. A basket-carriage was waiting at Gad's Hill station to drive me to the Dickens' mansion in time for dinner. Next day the host himself drove me about Cobham park. It was not until the evening, when we had become better acquainted, that he proposed that we walk to Rochester, around the Roman road, through the marshes, to see a quaint old church, that sent me back to bread and roots and exercise but with food and light from the genial and wise gossip of the great novelist. "Not quite forty miles out and back," said Dickens, as we reached Gad's Hill once, "strolling for five hours and a half, and seeing the country." Considering too, he might have added, the stoppages for hearty laughter, the episodes of open-gathering and stare-fashioning the visits to roadside hostelries, the legends, yarns and curious rumors at the talks with tramps, with children, and with inquisitive dogs, and the merry accompaniment of anecdote, reminiscence and remark, that made each mile a miracle of delight to one who was, for the time, as delightful with the Dickens of his books and his youthful dreams.

Every May His Own Doctor.

To keep things cool, Cain put them on the ice, but put the ice upon the things. This piece of wisdom was imparted to us by our grandmother, and, judging from the traditional ignorance displayed around us upon the subject, we should say that the penultimate generation generally was not sound upon the great questions of summer. The ancient ice-box was a humbug—a delusion to victuals and a snare for nasty smells. The modern refrigerator is built upon the proper principle—that cold air descends and hot air goes up, but it still has many imperfections in scant packing and complicated drainage. The best possible refrigerator would be constructed on the "Nyce Fruit House" plan, and be protected on all sides as well as top and bottom with a non-conductor of heat, which in the order of perfection is as follows: "Wool, cotton-seed, planing-mill shavings, charcoal and saw-dust. The space occupied by this non-conductor should be from six inches to a foot in width. The outside case may be made of wood, the inside should be of galvanized iron, with a partition of the same dividing it into two compartments; one-fourth of the space in the upper, which is to contain the ice, and three-fourths below, in which the things to be kept cool are put. A drain-pipe is put into the ice apartment, and the doors and lids are made air-tight. All of which requires a mechanic, of course, to construct; but for many purposes, almost any one can make an excellent refrigerator on the same principle in the following manner: Take two dry-goods boxes, one six inches smaller in each direction than the other. Put one inside the other, and pack the space with any of the material named. Put slats across the inside box near the top on which to rest the ice, and use a bag of sawdust or any other non-conducting matter for a lid. This is the only way an amateur is likely to make it air-tight. The whole affair will cost a dollar or two, and for many purposes far surpasses many of the most costly forms of refrigerators. No one has tasted a cold sodon until he has tried one that has been six or eight hours in such a box. There is no arrangement here made for drainage and materials spoilable by water will of course be put in water-tight vessels.

To keep milk cool at night for children, put a few "loose" drain bottles in one crock, on top of this put another rock of a size to pass over each, or so into the other, fill with ice water, wooden bottle in one hand, and cork the other [illegible]

Hence the old investigators intended to spect some popular notions. It has long been supposed that early cut hay is more valuable than that cut later. If the experiments of cows were a test [illegible] and peas [illegible] is about it. They will have free upper hay, and even in [illegible] at all, if they can procure that [illegible] has been cut earlier. In the writer's dairy, the milk falls off more than ten per cent, when the young hay is changed for that cut two weeks later. There is sufficient to support the general opinion in spite of the chemical analysis, which goes to show that ripe hay is heavier, more bulky, and contains more nutritious substance, than that cut earlier. Perhaps the operation of the stomach can extract more nutriment from ripe hay than can the cow's stomach, but as young hay feeds more profitably, it seems best to cut early.

Curing hay in the cocks is preferable to sun drying. The sweating and fermentation improve and prevent heating in the hay or stack. The writer prefers to put up hay, after the dew is off, in moderately large cocks—four feet wide and high—after it has lain spread in the sun one full day. It may thus stay safely for a week, if necessary, and a hay cap will protect it from a 24 hours' rain. The day it is drawn in, a man should start early and open the cocks, to get a final airing for two or three hours before it is taken up.

Dippers.

THE SOLE STAR—ITS USEFULNESS TO NAVIGATORS.—THE GREAT AND LITTLE BEAR.

There are three groups of stars which form a fancied resemblance to that utensil commonly known as the dipper. One of these is in the constellation of the Little Bear, another in the Great Bear, and the third, in Sagittarius, called from its situation on the Milky Way the Lower Bear has attracted more than ordinary attention from the fact that the Pole Star, or star nearest to the stationary point in the northern sky, is the last in the handle of the dipper.

The dipper of the Great Bear is composed of seven bright stars. As the pointers, the last two stars in the bowl of the dipper in this constellation, point nearly through the North Star, these two stars have received the name of "the Pointers." As the Pole Star is the guide of the mariner on the trackless ocean, and the forlorn hope of the bewildered traveler on the limitless prairie, these stars possess an interest which attaches to no other of the suns which night reveals to the heavens. The Great and Little Dippers are visible every clear night in this latitude, sometimes above the pole, and at other periods below it, but never sinking below the horizon.

The Milk Dipper in Sagittarius, like other constellations of the Zodiac, is visible only a part of the year, being most conspicuous during the summer months. The sun enters this constellation in December. The early navigators directed their course by the Pleiades, or Seven Stars, probably from their being easily recognized. But as they were visible only at certain seasons of the year, they were abandoned for the more reliable guide of the Pole Star when observation had pointed it out as the centre about which the stars appeared to revolve.

That the group of stars in the Great Bear has always attracted attention is shown by the names which it has received at different times, and by different nations. By the Romans it was called the Septentrio, Seven Working Oxen; by the Arabians, the Bier and Mourners; in the Middle Ages, Charles' Wain and the Plough; in more recent times, the Butcher's Cleaver, and at the present is best known by the name of the Dipper.

Besides its usefulness, and beauty as seen by the naked eye the constellation of the Great Bear, Ursa Major, presents many objects of interest when viewed through the telescope. The middle star in the handle of the Dipper, called by the Arabian astronomers, Mizar, is a double star, the two having a period of revolution about the common centre of both of about sixty years. This star can be observed to be double by a common spy glass. A small star, called Alcor, near Mizar, will the naked eye, is not physically connected with the stars in the Great Bear. The inhabitants of the earth, familiar only with the phenomenon presented by one sun, can have but a faint idea of the appearance presented by two suns, as in the case with Mizar, rising and setting, both appearing in the sky at the same time, one the cause of day and the other below the horizon.

In the Great Bear there are two singular nebulæ or cloud-like patches of light, one of them with two bright spots in the centre, the other of an oval form, with a white nucleus. Although so interesting to the inhabitants of the northern latitudes, both from its usefulness and its being always visible, yet it is never seen by those residing south of the equator, and although they rejoice in beholding the constellation of the Cross, even it has contributed less to the safety of navigation and the extension of commerce and civilization than the Great and Little Bear, which constantly adorn the northern sky.

Two Ways of Looking at a Thing.

Two boys went to hunt grapes. One was happy because they found grapes. The other was unhappy because the grapes had seeds in them.

Two men, being convalescent, were asked how they were. One said: "I am better to-day." The other said, "I was worse yesterday."

When it rains, one man says: "This will make hay." Another: "This will lay the dust."

Two children looking through colored glasses, one said: "The world is blue." And the other said, "It is bright."

Two boys eating their dinner, one said: "I would rather have something better than this." The other said: "This is better than nothing."

A servant thinks a man's house is a beautiy kitchen. A guest thinks it is a beautiy parlor.

"I am glad that I live," says one man. "I am sorry that I must die," says another.

"I am glad," says one, "that it is no worse." "I am sorry says another, "that it is no better."

One man counts everything that he has gain. Another counts everything else that he conceives a loss.

One man spoils a good repast by thinking of a better repast of another. Another enjoys a poor repast by contrasting it with none at all.

One man is thankful for his blessings. Another is meager for his misfortunes.

One man thinks he is entitled to better world and dissatisfied because he hasn't got it. Another thinks he is not justly entitled to any, and is satisfied with this.

One man makes up his accounts from his wants. Another from his assets.

Courting in Church.

A young mechanic happening to sit at church in a pew adjoining one in which there was a young lady for whom he conceived a sudden and violent passion, felt desirous of entering into a courtship on the spot, but the place not suiting a formal declaration the exigency suggested the following plan. He politely handed his neighbor a bible, open, with a pin stuck at the following verse: Second Epistle of St. John, verse 5. "And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but which we had from the beginning, that we love one another." She returned it with the following Second chapter of Ruth, 10th verse. "Then she fell on her face and bowed herself to the ground and said unto him, Why have I found grace in thine eyes, and that thou should take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger." He returned the book, pointing to the 13th verse of the Second Epistle of St. John, "Having many things to write unto you, I would not with paper and ink, but I trust to come to you, and speak face to face." From the above interview the marriage took place the following week.

CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM

Mental Panic Among the Letter Carriers.

Trying to Bridge the Gulf Between Mathematics and Mail Delivery.

[illegible] paper publishes a list of questions said to have been propounded to applicants for letter carriers' places a few days ago, and the distracted candidates are trying to find out if they have passed the ordeal satisfactorily. One of the questions, it is said, was a problem in fractions, the question being, "Mr. Bergholz, Mr. Dwyer and Mr. Lynch, three letter carriers, have a number of new shirts to be divided among them. Bergholz receives a few greenbacks and one shirt, Dwyer receives one shirt and one-half of the remaining shirts, and Lynch receives one of The Sun's angels and wares, which is a matter of civil service reform, and one of the letter carriers who has been [illegible] years and never missed a [illegible] The remainder of a dozen shirts was divided as follows: A received as much as A, C 4 times as much as B, D 1-6 as much as C, and E as all the rest. What was the share of each?" Now that is one of the questions we have got to answer before we can be accepted as letter carriers. By jingo, I don't know any more about a vessel than a Hindoo. I might take a slate and pencil and figure until Cheyenne froze over, and I couldn't tell how much was the share of each one of those shirt owners. My idea would be for the owners to play a game of seven-up to see who got the whole craft. A school boy that is studying vulgar fractions might figure it out and become out of my position, but what would he know about delivering letters down in the Norwegian language, with no street, and fool me on any letter that he might carry in our district. I can tell every man, woman and child, and when they move I get the news. I know where they go, and they get their letters before they get the carpets down, but dividing a schooner up into sixteenths is ahead of my time. Well, if they put a vessel ashore in my place I can take in washing. "Effie, have you take off your hats and sit close together," said a letter carrier, the elbow of whose gray pants had been torn out by a wire fence as he was coming out of a yard, to a friend on this conundrum. "A gold-[illegible] weighs together 19 ounces of gold 22 karats fine, 10 ounces 20 karats fine, and 24 ounces 23 karats fine. He sold it at the rate of [illegible] ounces of pure gold 24 karats fine. What was its fineness and what was the [illegible] received?" There's one that will make you sweat. What has a letter carrier to do with [illegible] gold and making it pure? I don't believe [illegible] in this town that would give [illegible] for it. If the question was of a letter carrier receiving $20 a month [illegible] and half the [illegible] dollars and have some [illegible] I'd know how to work it. I would [illegible] a week in advance. I would [illegible] to buy [illegible] and [illegible] I'd have [illegible] to a stump and [illegible] a quarter on it, and then I'd [illegible] it. But [illegible] I'm a letter carrier. [illegible] I'm a letter carrier, I'm a letter carrier, and I'm a letter carrier, and I'm a letter carrier, and

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

FRANKLIN FACTS.

One evening last week after Wiggins' big storm had settled down like a pall on our quiet little burg, a few of the villagers who were blessed with rubber boots congregated at Jerry Tuttle's store, to read the last HERALD, talk over the prospects of the spring sugar crop, eat peanuts and harass the postmaster. Within an hour after supper time a goodly company had assembled, and the warm glow of lively chat in doors contrasted strongly with the Nor'wester outside, which came whirling around the Pitcher mansion and down the Chicago pike. The conversation was just turning on the last snow storm and whether Michigan had ever seen its equal in the month of March, when the door suddenly flew open and two dilapidated looking females as black as the ace of spades marched in. They were evidently sable tramps. One of them carried a baby in her arms and the other a huge bundle. They complained of the cold, said they had got lost, and asked for supper and lodging. It was a case of deserved charity sure enough. So a committee was appointed to interview Mrs. Pitcher and ascertain whether she could entertain the strangers over night. Mrs. Pitcher kindly consented to do so but she thought it no more than fair that a purse should be made up to compensate her. Accordingly the hat was passed and the following persons shelled out: George Camburn, John Dunn, Robert Smith, J. A. Tuttle, Henry Tripp, Herbert Mudge, Thos. Conlin, Hiram Learnard and Mrs. Pitcher. Upon examining the contribution box it was found to contain $1,25 in silver, seventeen cents in coppers, an overcoat button, an old jack knife, three ten penny nails, a stick of gum and a ten cent postage stamp. Mrs. Pitcher agreed to accept the entire contents of the box and keep the strangers over night, and they were politely escorted across the road to the Pitcher mansion. When the women began to arrange their toilet for supper, lo and behold! the black washed off, and the discovery was then made that one of the sable females was a tall beautiful young man residing near the corners, and the other was a Tipton blacksmith. The baby was a huge rag doll, which had been extemporized for the occasion. Rather [illegible] of course and the sold acknowledged the corn. The two men who threw in a bogus quarter and a twenty cent piece with a hole in it had their contributions returned, and the balance of the purse went for peanuts and cigars, and every man present took a vow, with his right hand on the new testament and his left hand on his tobacco box, to keep forever mum. It so happened, however, that a HERALD reporter was concealed in a closet under the stairs and witnessed the entire proceedings through a gimlet hole in the wall. And hence these facts.

RIDGEWAY RUMBLINGS.

Both caucuses Saturday afternoon.

We now have bad roads, but the turnpike will be good in a day or two.

Ella Jackson and Jennie Kilpatrick are home from the Normal for the spring vacation.

At the church social to be held at the residence of Dr. D. W. Lorge next Friday evening, an extended literary program will be presented, which will add a new feature to the entertainment.

There are peculiar complications which cluster around the spring election in this township this spring. Most any result can be expected. There is a strong opposition to the town paying the ditch tax of certain individuals.

John R. Clark will address the citizens of Ridgeway, in the M. E. church, Sunday evening, on the subject of Temperance.

Henry Gordon,

Teacher of singing, offers his services to the people of Tecumseh and vicinity. Those wishing to be able to sing intelligently in church and public gatherings can obtain the needed instruction in the public singing class just organized. Those wishing special advancement can receive it in private lessons, the same instruction given in our best musical conservatories. Instruction also given in piano, organ and harmony. We refer to Rev. R. S. Pardington, Rev. Jesse Kilpatrick, Ridgeway; Rev. A. W. Wilson, Franklin.

I. F. Wheeler will give his illustrated lecture on Capri, Sicily and Rome in the M. E. church at Macon Center next Tuesday evening, April 3, and in the Baptist Church at Pennington's Corners on Wednesday evening, April 4.

WHY GO TO DAKOTA?

The gilded stories told of the rich fields and golden advantages which are possessed by the Far West, are just now having a telling effect upon a large number of people in different parts of this county, and from our exchanges we see that their effects are being felt to a marked extent throughout the entire state. Though many [illegible] parts of that country are said to afford fortunes at almost the asking, Dakota seems to stand preeminent among her sister states, as the big bonanza; and, thrilled by the idea of accumulating fortunes set forth in profusely printed and illustrated pamphlets and glaring hand-bills circulated by railroad companies and cunning speculators, hundreds of people from all parts of Michigan and not a few in our own county, are leaving for that country of great promise.

There is not a doubt but that there are some advantages to be had in some of those countries that we do not enjoy here, but after all, when you pause to think of it, does not Michigan possess many advantages that the inhabitants there are necessarily deprived of? We think she does, and when a fair comparison is made it is by no means a difficult thing to see that people of the peninsular state, all things considered, are as highly favored with natural advantages as they would be in Dakota or any other of the western states.

Michigan has her fertile farming lands, rich forests and valuable mining possessions, is a peer of any state in the Union, and all classes of her people are prosperous where they are industrious. Many will argue that they have accumulated nothing here, and if they are disappointed in the end, they will have nothing to lose. This is very true—nothing from nothing and nothing remains; but, at the same time, there are those joining this exodus who are disposing of beautiful farms and comfortable homes to raise money with which to reach that land and make investments, where they are led to believe all will be sunshine.

We hope their expectations may be fully realized, but fear that in many instances they will realize to their sorrow that the apparently plausible inducements that prompted them to leave their homes in Michigan were but empty baubles, and we are confident that in all cases they will find that wealth does not come by merely the asking, but that it will be there as here, industry will receive its just reward and no more. Our advice to those who are comfortably situated in Lenawee county is to be contented and stay where you are, and we candidly believe that the time will come when you will have reason to be exceedingly glad that you obeyed this injunction.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

The Lenawee County Board of Supervisors held their March meeting last week. But little business was transacted except the allowance of the usual accounts. No action was taken in regard to the new Court House. In regard to the alleged defalcation of Ex-County Clerk Church, a special committee was appointed to investigate it and their report was adopted.

REPORT.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors: Your special committee to whom was entrusted the investigation of the facts in regard to certain rumored defalcations in the accounts of an ex-official of this county, would respectfully report that on the 1st day of January, 1877, William L. Church entered into the duties of county clerk of this county by virtue of his election to the same, and continued to exercise the duties of said office for four consecutive years thereafter, and that during the time of his several terms of office there was paid to him according to the best of our information and belief, entry fees to the amount of four hundred dollars or more, which has never been paid over to the treasurer of the county as the law directs.

Your committee further find that the bondsman of said Church for the first term of two years was V. R. J. Osborn. But for the last term of two years which he occupied this office no bonds are on file in the treasurer's office, nor can your committee definitely ascertain whether any bond was given at the time by him the said Church.

Your committee, in the limited time allowed them, do not pretend to have learned all the facts in the case, but believe that enough is known to warrant the board in referring the whole matter to the prosecuting attorney for further investigation, with instructions to take prompt action in the matter in case the conclusions of your committee (in his judgment) should prove to be correct.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

CHAS. H. DEWEY,
C. C. BRADISH.

Marshall will have a telephone exchange soon.

A $20.00 Biblical Reward.

The publishers of Rutledge's Monthly offer, twelve valuable rewards in their Monthly for April, among which is the following:

We will give $20 in gold to the person telling us how many verses there are in the Old Testament Scriptures by April 10th, 1883. Should two or more correct answers be received, the reward will be divided. The money will be forwarded to the winner April 16th, 1883. Persons trying for the reward must send 20 cents in silver (no postage stamps taken) with their answer, for which they will receive the May Monthly, in which the name and address of the winner of the reward and the correct answer will be published, and in which several more valuable rewards will be offered. Address Rutledge Publishing Co., Easton, Pa.

Morenci Observer: The thermometer in the south part of the village marked 19° below zero last Tuesday morning, and the old citizens say that 40 years ago the snow was over a foot deep all through the month of March with no sign of thawing until April 1st, and the people went to town meeting that year in sleighs.

COUNTY CONDENSATIONS.

The home of S. W. Beverly of Deerfield, was burned last Friday (?)

Three workmen in the Clinton Factory were injured by accidents last week.

Nearly fifty persons have recently united with the Baptist church of Hudson.

The next regular examination of teachers will take place at Adrian on the 30th inst.

The Fairfield cheese factory will commence business for the season on the 2d of April.

Bishop Harris will visit Clinton to administer the rite of confirmation on the 30th of April.

The new Good Templars' Lodge, of Deerfield, start out with a maple sugar festival this week.

The New England supper last week for the benefit of the Clinton M. E. church was very successful.

M. Robb, of Jasper, cut down a large elm tree last week and found two bullets imbedded over six inches in the solid timber.

M. H. Cogswell and A. C. Bartholomew, of Blissfield, have purchased a fruit evaporator and will go into the fruit drying business next fall.

The Baptists of Clinton will build an addition to their church this season. The contract has been already let, and the work will begin at once.

J. J. Rhoades was defeated by one vote for Marshal of Blissfield. He claims that his opponent was illegally elected and will contest the case.

Blissfield has a man who gets insane occasionally from the use of morphine, gets delirium tremens occasionally, and has sold his body to the medical authorities of the Ann Arbor university.

Morenci voted $8,000 to build a city hall. But upon examining the village charter it was discovered that the village had no legal authority to issue bonds for such a purpose. Hence the hall will not be built.

The oldest inhabitant has again been heard from. Amos Kinney, of North Seneca, says that during his residence of 46 years in that town he never knew so much snow to fall in the same time as on Sunday night the 18th.

The salvation army invades Adrian, and Sergeant Bailey has explained that the army does not want any good people at its meetings; it has no use at all for christians; instead, unbelievers, roughs, toughs, and sots are called for.

Blissfield Advance: Petitions are being circulated and numerously signed, requesting the village council to raise the liquor bonds to $6,000 and that bondsmen shall reside within the village. It is said, if this is done, it will have the effect of closing up the saloons.

Morenci Observer: Our townsman, L. E. Phelps, says that fifty years ago he tended bar in his father's hotel, and that the minister of the church of which his father was a member, almost invariably came over on Sunday morning and got his potations of brandy before preaching services commenced. Things have changed slightly since then.

Hudson Gazette: They had a good joke on the deputy oil inspector at Jonesville, accusing him of testing lard oil and molasses. That deputy ought to attend his chief's lectures before the Adrian scientific society. However, it is better that all the lard oil and molasses in Hillsdale county should be inspected than that one barrel of contraband kerosene should escape.

Hudson Post: The other day a number of our Oscar wild girls went into Hall's grocery and bought a pound of taffy, when one of the number grabbed the parcel and lit out for down street, with the whole gang in pursuit, trying to regain possession of the package, whereupon an old farmer was heard to remark: "Well, they are lively 'uns, but playin tag's er good exercise, fur it brings out their muscle."

Hudson Post: The night train due in Hudson at 10:30 made a halt at the farm of widow Dibble, four and a half miles east of town and took on board the widow, in the raging northeaster of Sunday night last, and carried her to her sons in Elkhart. It was a big undertaking to transport a four hundred pound invalid out from her own home into the wintry night storm, and safely land her on board a Pullman, but filial love and affection were sufficient for the occasion, and it was tenderly accomplished through the influence of her sons, who are railroad men and reside at Elkhart.

A [illegible] Mortgage.

Indeed, we had been expected [illegible] result in [illegible] niece was John Harrington's [illegible] sole [illegible] or me she [illegible] But she [illegible] her [illegible] our [illegible] more and more pleased [illegible] loan had [illegible] to be a [illegible] an interest in those [illegible] that I should [illegible] from the same [illegible] place [illegible] fortune [illegible] grieved to think that the old man would soon die. We [illegible] for years, [illegible] would [illegible] scattered with the [illegible] made. [illegible] gold [illegible] minded reader. For a few minutes [illegible] self in my place.

[illegible] my place on that pleasant piazza [illegible] for as I stood [illegible] touch in my shoulder. I [illegible] was at hand [illegible] ing which indicated that the [illegible] had apparently [illegible] sure [illegible] saw standing [illegible] uniform of a Russian officer. I [illegible] put made no sound. I knew what the future was. It was a spectre—a veritable ghost.

Some years before this there had been hauntedness. I know the word for I had seen the ghost myself. But before my marriage the spectre had disappeared, and had not been seen since, and I had almost [illegible] when Grenshaw [illegible] mortgage or encumbrance, was [illegible] used to haunt the house had now departed.

But here he was again. Although in different form and guise, I knew him. It was the same ghost.

"Do you remember me?" said the figure.

"Yes," I answered, "I remember you in the form in which you appeared to me some time ago. Although your aspect is entirely changed, I feel you to be the same ghost that I have met before."

"You are right," said the spectre. "I am glad to see you so well, and apparently in [illegible] But John H[illegible] low state of health."

"Yes," I said, "he is very old and [illegible] But I hope," I continued, [illegible] to rise within me, "that his expected decease has no connection with any prospects or plans of your own."

"No," said the ghost. "I am perfectly satisfied with my present position. I am not only during the day and the difference in time between this country and Russia gives me opportunities of being home in your early evening, and of visiting scenes and localities which are familiar and agreeable to me."

"Which fact, perhaps, you had counted upon when you first put this uniform on," I remarked.

The ghost smiled.

"I must admit, however," he said, "that I am seeking this position for a friend of mine, and I have reason to believe that he will obtain it."

"Good heaven!" I exclaimed. "Is it possible that this house is to be haunted by a ghost as soon as the old gent's man expires. Why should this family be [illegible] in a horrible way. Everyone who does not have a ghost walking [illegible]

"Oh, no," said the spectre. "There are thousands of positions of the kind which are never applied for, but the ghostship here is a very desirable one, and there are many applicants for it. I think you will like my friend, if he gets it."

"Like him!" I groaned.

The idea was horrible to me.

The ghost [illegible] how deeply I was affected [illegible] said, for there was a compassionate expression on his countenance. As I [illegible] sick at me. If I were [illegible] ghost at all about the house. I wished [illegible] one. Could there be such things as double ghostships? Since it was daylight when I was night in Russia, why could not this spectre serve in both places? [illegible] for a person to [illegible] seemed feasible [illegible]

"Thank you," said the spectre. "But the matter cannot be arranged in that way. Night and day are not quickly divided between here and Russia, and, besides, it is necessary for the incumbent of this place to be on duty at all hours. You remember that I came to you by day as well as at night."

Oh, yes; I remember that. It was additionally unfortunate that the ghostship should not be one of the limited kind.

"Why is it," I asked, "that a man's own spirit does not attend to these matters? I always thought that was the way the thing was managed."

The ghost shook his head.

"Consider for a moment," he replied, "what chance a man's own spirit, without experience and without influence, would have in a crowd of importunate applicants, versed in all the arts, and backed by influence necessary in such a contest. Of course there are cases in which a person becomes his own ghost but this is because the position is undesirable and there is no competition."

"And this new comer," I exclaimed, "what trouble, "will he take the form of Mr. Hinckman? If my wife should see such an apparition it would kill her."

"The ghost who will haunt this place," said my companion, "will not appear in the form of John Hinckman. I am glad that is so, if it will please you; for you are the only man with whom I have ever had such unrestrained and pleasant intercourse. Good by."

And with those words no figure of a Russian officer stood before me.

For some minutes I remained motionless, with downcast eyes, a very different man from the one who had just gazed out with such delight over the beautiful landscape. A shadow, not that of night, had fallen over everything. This fine estate was not to come to us clear and unencumbered, as we thought. It was to be saddled with a horrible lien, a spectral mortgage.

Madeline had gone up-stairs to Pegram. Pegram was our baby. I disliked his appellation with all my heart, but Pegram was a family name of Madeline's side of the house, and she insisted that our babe should bear it. Madeline was very much wrapped up in Peg-

[illegible] thought too [illegible] there [illegible] where I should have been [illegible] my wife's [illegible] "about it, beside." He was [illegible] with Pegram [illegible]

[illegible] I answered, with considerable [illegible] "What would you have done if [illegible] and [illegible] ance to speak, and at the breakfast table I said to her:

"I suppose you heard the disturbance last night?"

"Yes," she said quietly. "Did you [illegible] the [illegible]

"I [illegible] answered, with considerable [illegible] "What would you have done if [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] would [illegible] answer my purpose as well."

[illegible] Fourth night after I had [illegible] grounds, I encountered, on a path not very far from the house, the young fellow who had given us so much trouble. My indignation at his impudent reappearance knew no bounds. The moon was somewhat obscured by downy clouds but I could see that he wore the same jaunty air, his hat was cocked a little more on one side, he stood with his feet quite wide apart, and in his hands, clasped behind him, he held his riding whip. I stepped quickly toward him.

"Well, sir," I exclaimed.

He did not seem at all startled.

"How d'ye do," he said, with a little nod.

"How dare you, sir," I cried, "intrude yourself on my premises. This is the second time I have found you here, and now I want you to understand that you are to get away from here just as fast as you can, and if you are ever caught again anywhere on this estate, I'll have you treated as a trespasser."

"Indeed," said he, "I would be sorry to put you to so much trouble. And now, if one may ask, what I have done to incur your wrath, but since you have proved so determined to make my acquaintance, I thought I might as well come forward and do the sociable."

"None of your impertinence," I cried. "What brings you here, anyway?"

"Well," said he, with a little laugh, "if you want to know I don't mind telling you I came to see Miss Belle."

"You unfounded rascal!" I cried, raising my heavy stick. "Get out of my sight, or I will break your head."

"All right," said he, "break away!"

And drawing himself up, he gave his right boot a slap with his whip.

The whip went entirely through both legs! It was the ghost!

Utterly astounded I started back, and sat down upon a raised flower-bed, against which I had stumbled. I had no strength, nor power to speak. I had seen a ghost before, but I was entirely overcome by this amazing development.

"And now I suppose you know who I am," said the spectre, approaching, and standing in front of me. "The one who was here before told me that your lady didn't fancy ghosts, and that I had better keep out of sight of both of you; but he didn't say anything about Miss Belle, and by George! sir, it wouldn't have mattered if he had; for if it hadn't been for that charming young lady I shouldn't have been here at all. I am the ghost of Buck Edwards, who was pretty well known in the lower part of this county about seventy years ago. I always had a great eye for the ladies, sir, and when I got a chance to court one I didn't miss it. I did too much courting, however, for I roused up a jealous fellow, named Ruggles, and he shot me in a duel early one September morning. Since then I have haunted from time to time, more than a dozen houses where there were pretty girls.

"Do you mean to say," I asked, now finding strength, "that a spirit would care to come back to this earth to court a girl?"

"Why, what are you thinking of?" exclaimed the phantom of Buck Edwards. "Do you suppose that only old misers and love-lorn maidens want to come back and have a good time? No sir! Every one of us, who is worth anything, comes if he can get a chance. By George, sir! do you know I courted Miss Belle's grandmother? And a couple of gay young ones we were too! Nobody ever knew anything of it, and that made it all the livelier."

"Do you intend to stay here and pay attention to my sister-in-law?" I asked, anxiously.

"Certainly I do," was the reply. "Didn't I say that is what I came for?"

"Don't you see the mischief you will do?" I asked. "You will probably break off a match between her and a most excellent gentleman whom we all desire."

"Break off the match!" exclaimed the ghost of Buck Edwards, with a satisfied grin. "How many matches I have broken off! The last thing I ever did, before I went away, was of that sort. She wouldn't marry the gentleman who shot me." There was evidently no consequence to this spectre.

"And if you do not care for that," I said, in considerable anger, "I can tell you that you are causing ill-feeling between the young lady and the best friends she has in the world, which may end very disastrously."

"Now, look here, my man," said the ghost; "if you and her wife are really her friends you won't act like fools and make trouble."

I made no answer to this remark, but asserted, with much warmth, that I intended to tell Miss Belle exactly what he was, and so break off the engagement at once.

"If you tell her that she's been walking and talking with the ghost of the fellow who courted her grandmother—I reckon she could find some of my letters among the old lady's papers, if she looked for them—you'd frighten the wits out of her. She'd go crazy. I know girls' natures, sir."

"So do I," I groaned.

"Don't get excited," he said. "Let the girl alone, and everything will be comfortable and pleasant. Good night."

I went to bed, but not to sleep. Here was a terrible situation. A sister-in-law courted by a ghost! Was ever a man called upon to sustain such a trial? And I must sustain it alone. There was no one with whom I could share the secret.

Several times after this I saw this baleful spectre of a young buck of the olden time. He would nod to me with a jocular air, but I did not care to speak to him. One afternoon I went into the house to look for my wife, and, very naturally, I entered the room where Pegram lay in his little bed. The child was asleep, and no one was with him. I stood and gazed contemplatively upon my son. He was a handsome child, and apparently full of noble instincts, and yet I could not help wishing that he were older, or that in some way his condition were such that it should not be necessary, or, more strictly speaking, that his mother should [illegible] about him. If she could [illegible] with a little [illegible] of Pegram and a little more of me, my anticipations of a matrimonial career would be more fully [illegible]

As I [illegible] thoughts were passing through my mind I saw, with my eyes, another side of the [illegible] I saw [illegible] Hannah [illegible] I rather live with [illegible] there was one [illegible] the gloom [illegible] was [illegible] and his hands, holding [illegible] and rather [illegible] rested carelessly on [illegible]

THE ORIGINAL COL. SELLERS.

The Operations of Old Bill Muldrow in the Wilds of Missouri.

[illegible] New York Sun.

[illegible] has seen a very [illegible] Bill Muldrow [illegible] Wars. He [illegible] the house of Representatives [illegible] incredulous laughter [illegible] the aforesaid [illegible] has never [illegible] Bill Muldrow, commonly known [illegible] He was a farmer and [illegible] near Philadelphia, Mo. Philadelphia was then a village of [illegible] inhabitants, and is still a [illegible]

Bill Muldrow was the first man who conceived the idea of a railroad connecting the Mississippi with the Pacific.

By every course of reasoning known only to himself, he reached the conclusion that Philadelphia could be made the future great city of the West, if not of the world, and with this end in view he projected his plans for the building of a road that was to have San Francisco for its Western terminus and for its eastern terminus Marion City, a boat landing on the Mississippi, about a mile east of Philadelphia. Firmly persuaded that there were "fortunes in it," he went east and confided his plans and aspirations to capitalists by the aid and selling at $[illegible] per foot in connection with his railroad [illegible]

What sort of a talk he was, and how well he succeeded in inducing these capitalists with his own enthusiasm, may be imagined when we state that the sound of the hammer was heard and the steady tramp of the hod carrier in the streets of Philadelphia soon succeeded the [illegible] silence of the sleepy town. A four story hotel opened story by story toward the clouds. Blocks of buildings rose faster than men could or would look to occupy them. A wharf was erected at Marion City, and the embankment that was to reach from the Mississippi west to the great city of Philadelphia, and still west to the golden gate of the Pacific, was begun. Things were booming, but it was a surface boom. Deeper down there was a heavy undertow.

Large sums of money were required. Muldrow's backers, beginning to mistrust the financial success of the scheme, became more niggardly in their advances. As the expenses grew heavier the money with which to meet them grew less, and, as with by now they left behind, the army of hewers, the horde of laborers on the embankment and the pile drivers and bridge builders of Marion City, for like Venice it was on the water, became more clamorous for their pay.

The crash came, as in such cases it inevitably must come. Bill Muldrow was ruined financially, but, as he soon had occasion to demonstrate, not intellectually. The sheriff, preparatory to making a levy, called on him for an inventory of his real estate. Bill was equal to the occasion. He gave in not only his own land, but interspersed between tracts much that was not his own. Now, Muldrow, like many other unfortunate men, was blessed with some in-law, and to these he confided his scheme and asked their assistance. Hurriedly the in-law's own land minutely and instructed them when to bid.

The sale came off. The first tract offered did not belong to Bill, and this soon became whispered around. The result was that the bidding was very slow, and the sale was almost paralyzed. The some-in-law scooped in the bona fide tract for a paltry sum.

Having saved his farm, Bill went to California, where he engaged in some kind of a land speculation, and where his fondness for lawsuits soon became proverbial. A ten-minutes' conversation with him invariably resulted in a suit at law. Failing to retrieve his fortunes in the west, he returned in his old age to the scene of his former triumph, and his ashes now rest in the country church-yard near his old home.

Philadelphia still [illegible] a relic, yet [illegible] what was, but of what might have been. The hotel looms up, gray and grand in its utter desolation. The window-glass is broken, the walls are cracked, the ceilings are mildewed, and the very bricks seem crumbling back to the dust from whence they came.

Marion City found a grave 'mid the swirling waters of the Mississippi in the great flood of [illegible] but the [illegible] and the old rock bridge still fight their share of the battle that always ends in ruin.

Telephoning to Ireland.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

During the dull hours of noonday the Broadway horse-dealers while away the time by practical joking. Yesterday one of the funniest jokes was perpetrated on an unsuspecting Irishman who sauntered into John P. Mullally's stable. After a desultory talk he was drawn into giving a history of himself. He said he was from the McNeal's, Bally James Duff, county Kavan, Ireland, and his daughter Kate and brother Jerry lived on the land that he first saw the light on. McNeal rented the land adjoining his, and lived there with his wife, son and daughter. He gave many other facts about his family. A few moments later Mr. Mullally withdrew and went to Tom Maxwell's stable. McNeal was asked if he wouldn't like to hear from Ireland by telephone. He was delighted with the project, and put his ear to the trumpet, asking "Who's there?"

From Maxwell's stable, which in the meantime had been conveyed over to Mullally's, Mullally replied in a voice as nearly like McNeal's as he could. "This is Kate O'Neal, Bally James Duff, Ireland."

"Mocha Machree," exclaimed Mike dropping the trumpet and rubbing his hands in [illegible] "I recognize her voice." Continuing the trumpet he put his nose against the mouthpiece and yelled out: "I'm your own Patrick, Kate Luce, Missouri. Until a score of Americans [illegible] "Uncle Jerry is well," replied the voice. "He went to town to day. I got your message. Uncle Jerry is going to take Patty McCleland. Give me have to message." The man was silent, and McNeal hung up the trumpet saying, "Howay Mike, what an accent she has!" He then set out to find the woman to come down to Stalls to listen from Mullally's stable.

Gambetta as a Writer.

Cincinnati Enquirer.

Gambetta was not a brilliant writer, and he never knew where to stop. He is related that he would enter his sanctum upon any [illegible] want about half a newspaper to night. [illegible] constitution of the eye makes it necessary to use great care in selecting spectacles.

B. Mincer has made the eye his special study, and in late years has paid his entire attention to the adaption of Spectacles to the same. Having a thorough experience in making and adapting spectacles to the eye, he is enabled to fit accurately in every case of abnormal vision, known as Presbyopia, Myopia, and Hypermetropia, as well as weak sight, requiring various tinted glasses. His improved Spectacles are of a perfect construction which assists and preserves the sight, rendering frequent changes quite unnecessary. They confer a brilliancy and distinctness of vision with an amount of ease and comfort not generally enjoyed by persons using spectacles. His lenses are ground on the most scientific principles, rendering them as clear as when in the full strength of youth.

B. Mincer has some flattering testimonials of some of the leading citizens and oculists in the state, as to ability in fitting spectacles.

I called on Mr. Mincer, optician, who readily adapted glasses to my eyes, with which I can see [illegible] I [illegible] success in his favor. His method of examination, and application in selecting glasses to the eye, can only be acquired by a knowledge of the subject, to which must be added [illegible] experience. He has also adapted glasses to Mrs. Baker's eyes, with which she is well pleased. I recommend him to all who need glasses, and feel confident in his ability to fit them properly.

THE FIRE ESCAPE.

Dismissed by Daylight and Destruction by Night.

Philadelphia Press.

The so called fire escape may answer for the deliverance of a few out of the hundreds in a hotel or factory, but as to its utility as a safety for the many, proof is easily made. Let the proprietor of a hotel, for instance, select a fair and sunshiny day, and marshal his guests for a parade out of the windows and down to the street by the way of the alleged fire escape. Let him allow them ample time to dress, and to descend without crowding on one another. The result will be that many of the inhabitants of the upper floors will be so dizzy on reaching the ladders that they will shrink back with fright and refuse to be allowed to go down by the way of the elevator. Presently the "escape" will be blocked by reason of some scared to death person who clings in desperation to a ladder, refusing to go up or down, or sideways or in any other direction. The others, who would descend, can neither go around the person or climb over him. Their only way to clear the passage is to push him off into the street, or, if more mercifully disposed, to carry him down to the next landing and leave him there.

Now, instead of the trial of the "escape" taking place in the daytime and under the most favorable auspices imagine it at night, with rooms and corridors full of smoke, with the roof ablaze and the flames every moment rolling nearer to those who would flee. The lodgers are in their night clothes, and without their boots. Not one in ten of them has thought of placing garments where they can be grasped and put on in a moment. The decision must be made in a moment between instant flight and terrible destruction. Rheumatic old ladies, corpulent gentlemen, frightened mothers with babies in their arms, young ladies who never climbed a ladder in their lives, and all manner of other inexperienced persons must rush for the "escape" or die. The possibilities of such a descent as they must make are nothing short of awful. Some hotels have recently supplied each room with a long knotted rope, down which the guest is expected to climb, in case of need. The spectacle of two or three hundred half-clad lodgers descending at night from upper windows by means of these knotted ropes will be second in interest only to that which is afforded by a troop of monkeys in a tropical jungle, swinging from trees by loosely hanging vines.

Inventors and law-makers may tinker as they please with devices which they call fire escapes. The only really safe way to get out of a burning building is to go down an enclosed stairway made of brick and iron. Hotels and factories which have this may talk about safety in case of fire. Those who venture their lives in others do so at the risk of being offered up as sacrifices.

American Fables.

Dear Free Press.

One day two Foxes who were journeying together came across a Track in the dust which astonished them.

"I believe it is the Track of a Rhinoceros," observed one.

"I think it is that of an Elephant," replied the other.

"I say Rhinoceros!"

"And I say Elephant."

"Then I travel no longer with such an Idiot!"

"Then you can travel alone with a Fool!"

They were cuffing each other about in a lively manner, when along came a Wolf and asked the cause of the trouble.

"Why, that Bigot sticks to it that this is not the track of a Rhinoceros!" shouted one.

"And I say, the Narrow minded Muldoon, won't admit that it is the Track of an Elephant," added the other.

"Go at them," said the Wolf, as he examined the spot, "this is simply the place where a fat man struck a Banana Peel and sat down to Reflect. You are both wrong and both Fools."

A Hen having laid an Egg set up such a Cackle that presently the whole Barn-yard was in confusion, and the Farmer came running out to see what was going on.

"What is it?" he demanded, as the Hen cackled louder than ever.

"Why, I've laid an Egg!"

"An Egg! Why, a single Egg isn't worth but two cents at the present market price."

"Yes, I know, but if I didn't do two shillings worth of cackling over every two cents worth of egg, the world would soon forget me."

A Peasant having saved up a sum of Money by hard work and peeling his Potatoes close, went to the nearest Village and invested in an Accordion. On his way home he began playing the air of "My Grandfather's Clock," but scarcely had the echoes reached the Forest when out came a Chopper, who cried out:

"Man! Man! for Heaven's sake hang up that! You will kill us all with your Racket."

"Can't help that," replied the Peasant as he pulled away harder than ever. "If what tickles me all over is Death to you that is not my lookout. I will now give you 'The Empty Cradle,' with variations."

A WOMAN'S EXPERIENCE.

What a Lady of Great Prominence has to Say About Her Sex.

(Boston Globe.)

On a recent trip by a representative of this paper to the city of Haverhill, Mass., a most important incident occurred which cannot fail to be of the greatest interest to all, and especially to our lady readers. The newspaper man met a lady a trifle past middle age with luxurious white hair that contrasted strikingly with piercing black eyes. She possessed a straight, full habit, womanly but commanding, combined with manner wholly ladylike and yet pronounced. Any acute judge of human nature could see at once that he was in the presence of an unusual personage, one destined to accomplish more than most of her sex and to exert an influence far reaching in its power. This lady was Mrs. M. W. Wingate. Almost from childhood she has taken a special interest in the bodily troubles of her sex, and has probably been more successful in relieving suffering and saving lives than any other woman in America. Indeed she seems to have been to women what Florence Nightingale and Dorothy Dix were to the suffering soldiers. The instances of woman who were in the greatest agony and apparently beyond the reach of human aid, that she has restored to health and happiness, are almost innumerable, and it was only natural that the scribe should become specially interested and wish to converse with her more in detail.

"How long have you been engaged in the practice of medicine, Mrs. Wingate?"

"For more than 25 years."

"A long time certainly. How did you happen to enter the field at that early day when women in the professions were specially frowned down upon?"

"I think I must inherited a taste from my father, Professor J. C. Wood, of Harvard college. He was eminent in the profession, a hard worker and equally earnest in his recreations. He hunted considerably and I remember when only nine years old I used to dissect the birds and animals he had killed. I felt infatuated with medical science even then, and the infatuation has continued up to the present time."

"And did you begin your studies so early in life?"

"I can hardly say when I began, for I can not remember when I did not read medical literature. You would scarcely believe it, but I was a slender girl and did not weigh over 120 pounds, but I used to sit up night after night until 2 o'clock in the morning, poring over my studies and never dreaming of the flight of time. It seemed as though calls for my attendance on the sick always came unsolicited. I certainly cannot fix the date when I first began practicing. Of course most of my patients were women, and the natural sympathy I felt for my sex has increased during all these years where I have been brought so closely in contact with them and have learned to anticipate their needs and sympathize with their sufferings. After the opening of the Boston Medical College I appeared before the faculty, passed examination and received a diploma. I had practiced for years previous to that time but thought it desirable to receive another diploma, which I did without any effort."

"Your experience with the many and serious diseases of women having been so extensive must also be valuable. Can you give us some facts regarding them?"

"I find that woman seems born to suffering, and where she avoids it, it is by reason of some care on her part or some [illegible] power. It is true since women go through life without unusual suffering, but they are none the less in danger, for there are critical periods all along their pathway when the utmost precaution is required. The innumerable complaints, called female weaknesses, the irregularities of life and changes of the system all indicate the perils which hang over every woman's career, and which unless attended to, may result disastrously.

"But is there no way by which these terrible troubles can be avoided?"

"That has been the problem for years. The twists of life and the demands of fashion age sharply at war with the health of women. I have been, perhaps, unusually successful in my treatment of their troubles, but there have been many cases that seemed specially stubborn. I recall one in particular. I had exhausted all the usual expedients and the results were not satisfactory. I became worried over the case and really did not know what to do, but finally thought I would try something out of the usual line. I had heard a certain remedy recommended very highly and so I procured some and made a chemical analysis of it. I found it was perfectly pure, and that the ingredients were unusually valuable. So I began giving it to my patient, changing it however into a bottle of my own. To my great joy it seemed to have an almost immediate effect, and a complete cure was the result. Since then I have used it constantly in my practice and have cured every form of female weakness, as well as displacements, dropsical tumors, cellulitis, and all such troubles. I have also used it with the best of results in cases of pregnancy and gestation. Indeed I have found it of untold value and benefit."

"Have you any objection to giving us the name of this remedy of which you speak?"

"None whatever. It is Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure."

"Why, this is a proprietary medicine?"

"Certainly, but what of that? I have but one end in view in the treatment of my patients, namely, their restoration to health. In the accomplishment of this end I prescribe what I believe to be beneficial, no matter what the professional consequences may be."

"I notice in the New York papers that Doctors Hammond, Agnew and other prominent physicians are taking a similar stand, Mrs. Wingate."

"Yes, and all independent thinkers in the profession are bound to do so. I am, however, on the best of terms with my professional brethren as you can see," and the lady produced a beautiful gold medal mounted in the form of a badge which had been presented her by the medical society, known as the Ensign of the Humble Family, of which she is a prominent member. After examining it closely, the reporter remarked that the medical profession evidently were proud of what she had done, as she might well be in the possession of such a medal.

"I am proud of that," she replied, "and I was also pleased a short time since to receive an offer at a large salary to take the professorship in the medical college at Walla Walla, on the Pacific coast. I do not know how they heard of me out there, but I was obliged to decline their offer."

"And so, in your experience with the diseases of women, you have found success and that Warner's Safe Cure has been a most efficient remedy."

"Yes I have had unusual success and the remedy of which you speak has been proven of great benefit. There are, however, some base imitations of it to be found in the market, these are bad and should be avoided, but the genuine remedy is one of the very best."

"And has not the practice of your profession injured your health?"

"No. I am better now than ever before in my life. A frost froze my limbs last winter, while riding on a cold night to see a patient and was obliged to remain indoors for over two months. Otherwise I am healthy, as you can see by looking at me."

"And may I publish this interview, Mrs. Wingate?"

"Yes. If what I have told you should be the means of assisting any women who may be suffering, I shall be perfectly willing to have it published."

If you are in debt, somebody owns part of you.

Another Life Saved.

J. C. Gray, of Dadeville, Ala., writes us; I have been using your Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the lungs, and I can say, of a truth, it is far superior to any other lung preparation in the world. My mother was confined to her bed four weeks with a cough, and had every attention by as good physicians as there are in the country, and they have failed to effect a cure; but then I got one bottle of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the lungs, she began to mend right away. I can say in truth, that it was the means of saving her life. I knew of five cases that Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam has cured, and my mother is better now than she has been before for twenty years.

Lost Faith In Physicians.

Why is it that so many persons use proprietary medicines, or patent medicines, as they are commonly called? It is because people loose faith in their physicians. Well this is, no doubt, frequently the case. There are innumerable instances where cures have been effected by Scovill's Sarsaparilla or Blood & Liver Syrup for all diseases of the blood, when they had been given over by their physicians. It is one of the best remedies ever offered to the public, and as it is prepared with the greatest care, as a specific for certain diseases, it is no wonder that it should be more effectual than hastily written and carelessly prepared perscriptions made by incompetent physicians. Take Scovill's Blood and Liver Syrup for all disorders arising from impure blood. It is endorsed by leading professional men as well as eminent physicians and others. Try it.

AN OATH.

CRAWFORD CO., PA., CITY OF TITUSVILLE.

Personally appeared before me Peter Phillips, who, being sworn according to law, deposes and says: That he has been affected with Rheumatism, more or less, for the past four or five years. That last winter he had a very severe attack, and that the pain was excruciating, and he could only move about in his own room by taking hold of something for support. When the disease was in its most acute form, and the pain almost unbearable, he took a dose of Wilson's Lightning Remedy, which caused immediate relief, and the second dose, taken five hours after, made a perfect and permanent cure, and that since taking the two doses he has been free from the disease, or any symptoms thereof.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAR. 29, 1883.

Two weeks ago last Monday Wiggins was the hero of the hour and now he is deader than Guiteau.

This is the season of "etherial mildness." But we have failed to discover any of the e. m. in ours, as yet.

Something is the matter across the water. Queen Victoria slipped down and sprained her knee, and the English government has not hanged an Irishman for over a month.

Representative Bixby's bill forbidding members of the Legislature, state officers and judges of the supreme and circuit courts from accepting or using railroad passes was killed in the House by having all after the enacting clause stricken out. The vote stood 23 in favor of the bill to 29 against.

The death of Postmaster General Timothy O. Howe removes one of the ablest and most distinguished men of the Northwest. He entered public life at an early age and by honorable effort worked his way up, step by step, to a high position. He was prominent and influential in the U. S. Senate during the war. Mr. Howe rose far above the small tricks of the average politician and throughout his whole career was eminently candid and courageous. Among the matters with which his name will be conspicuously connected by the historian is the reduction of letter postage from three to two cents, which would probably not have been accomplished at the last session of Congress but for his strong recommendation. Mr. Howe's strict personal integrity and entire honesty of purpose have never been questioned. He leaves a stainless record.

We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to attend the banquet to be given by the press of Detroit to the Michigan Press Association tomorrow evening. It would give us much pleasure to attend this banquet, to taste the editorial turkey and drink the editorial lager on that occasion.—As we havn't enjoyed a good square meal since last Christmas we flatter ourselves that we could do justice to this banquet. But the spring election is approaching. We shall have tickets to print by the hundred, and pasters "till you can't rest." Election day is the rural editor's harvest time, which is equalled only on circus day and holiday week. The banqueters, therefore, will have to struggle along without our presence. If the committee in charge however could set a plate for us, fill it with a full course, carefully place the contents in a band-box and express the same C.O. D. to our address, this act of courtesy would be gratefully appreciated. We can probably raise funds enough to take the band-box from the express office, and we pledge ourselves that the contents shall be placed where they will do the most good.

Speaking of the union ticket, the Agricultural World, an independent agricultural paper, printed at Grand Rapids, says: "The combination is not the direct outgrowth of the result of the election last fall; but from the anti-monopoly sentiment that to a great extent controls the two parties in Michigan. The announcement in the national convention, by J. I. Mead, one of the leading citizens in Lansing, that $10,000 had been subscribed by the railroads of the state to elect one of the republican candidates for justice of the supreme court, fell like a thunderbolt on the convention, and had the effect of bringing into line, for union, many who had before honestly opposed a union of the two organizations. The outcome of the combination will again put to test the powers of organized capital over the people. One thing is certain: the people, regardless of party, are beginning to think and act for themselves. Railroad syndicates for the election of a favored one to the position of justice of the supreme court of Michigan, and free tickets to legislators and judges means "black mail" upon the producing interests and cannot be too speedily denounced by the people by electing to positions of honor and trust men who are not willing to make paupers of a thousand human beings in order that one hundred may be made rich through the operation of unjust laws."

DON'T SPECULATE.

We have lately had a flood of embezzlements and other forms of theft, and it has been the same story in every case. Trusted cashiers and others charged with the money of their neighbors, speculated and lost.

In nineteen cases out of twenty, no crime was intended. Had the thought of theft occurred to the parties who proved to be criminals, they would have shuddered and recoiled from themselves; but they lost their own money; they borrowed without leave to make new ventures, and ended as embezzlers and thieves.

Most of the scores of men who have lately startled the country by their embezzling, were citizens of unblemished reputations, commanding the unbounded confidence of their respective communities; but the inordinate ambition to get rich, to live in style, to give their children the hollow respectability of fortune, and to gain the mocking homage of fools and hypocrites, made them venture step by step until detected crime and inefaceable shame logically followed.

Don't speculate. Not one in a thousand of those who attempt to win fortune by speculative gambling has profited by it; and many who have not been broken in fortune, have wasted what is of greater value than gold—honest industry. The only wealth that lasts and that is full of comfort, is that gained by industry and enterprise, and every departure from legitimate pursuits to gain riches is crowded with peril at every step. Don't speculate.—N. Y. Sun.

SEED CORN.

The following we take from the Michigan Farmer:

TECUMSEH, March, 15, '83.

I saw in my Farmer of this week an article on testing seed corn, and as I have just been attending to that very thing, I thought I would give my plan.

Last fall I husked my corn in October, and before there was any freezing weather I picked out eighty bushels of ears and kiln dried it around and over my house furnace. I have been sprouting it, and I find every kernel sprouts vigorously.

Thinking there might be trouble about seed on account of the corn going into the cribs so soft, is why I saved so much. Should any one want I will have some to spare. The variety is the large yellow dent. I have invariably made a practice of drying over a kitchen stove or about a chimney or some such place, but being always sure to have it perfectly dry before freezing weather. I have never had a bad stand since I practiced this method. No matter how dry you get it; I think the drier the safer.

Seed corn should never be picked out of the crib in the spring. It may grow, but can never make a rapid strong growth that corn will that is treated as I have described.

I wish to relate a circumstance that occurred in this neighborhood a few years ago. A farmer fitted a field alongside the highway, and it was as near as possible in the same tilth and condition in every way. He had saved about half seed enough the fall before to plant the field, and took the other half from a neighbor's crib to finish with. That taken from the crib all sprouted and came up, but about a week later than the seed that he prepared. It came up spindling and yellow, and was behind the other all summer, and was just as far behind when husked in the fall in regard to yield. I once knew a lot of corn that had laid over a cook-stove for four years, taken down and planted, and it all grew splendidly. It had been dried to a crisp. I say again, never pick your seed corn out of a crib in the spring, and confidently expect a good crop.

The contents of "The Popular Science Monthly" for April, besides being well varied, are all of a character to command attention and stimulate thought. The leading place is given to an essay by Professor Sheldon Amos on the "Nature and Limits of the Science of Politics." In "The Economical Function of Vice" Mr. John McElroy takes the novel ground that men's vicious propensities play an important part in natural selection and the improvement of mankind, eliminating by a self-chosen process its worst and most worthless elements, and making more room for the play of the better factors of society. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 50 cents per number. $5 per year.

The latest fashion from Paris is a poodle with a handle. The Parisian ladies are wild on dogs for pets. The brute is led by a string, and grabbed up at each crossing to be carried over the pavement. When shaggy dogs were in vogue the habit was to pick them up by the hair and they were trained not to yelp. Pugs as smooth as new born pigs are now the favorites, and of course they have no hair to be lifted by. But a clever surgeon cut the end from a little dog's tail, made an incision in the middle of his back, stuck in the tail tip, let it heal fast, and there was as handy a handle as could be wished for.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, March 27th, 1883.

The shooting of broker Haverstick by the brother of Mrs. Uhler, the woman whom he led astray, is still the all absorbing topic of conversation in all circles, and the progress of the inquest on the case is watched with the most curious interest. There is something very mysterious about the whole case. Why for instance was the divorce suit not pushed? Why does Mrs. Uhler not even appear on the scene, but run away to another state where he is out of reach of the coroner? Why did Mrs Uhler plead to her brother to take her away from that man? and why did she tell him afterwards that that man would not allow her to leave. These and other questions are yet to be solved in order to make this Zolaic drama from real life intelligible, and with the natural curiosity that people possess to become acquainted with the affairs of others, coroner, police and reporters are anxious to unravel the mystery. As regards Haverstick, I have spoken to numbers of men who have met him socially and in business, but I have yet to find one who does not conclude his estimate of the man with the remark: "Conkling served him right. It is a good thing that he is gone." He was essentially cold, hard and at the same time a shrewd man. Though nominally solely a mining broker, he dabbled in other securities and valuables and recently made a snug haul in petroleum. Liberal with his money when he expected to reap a profit of a hundred per cent. at some future time; no one remembers a single kindly act of his which shows that the man possessed a heart. Bound to enjoy himself, or rather to taste every pleasure, he was yet equally determined to do so at the least possible expense to himself. He was one of that class of modern rakes, copied after the depraved specimens of the European continent to whom nothing is sacred, who take satisfaction in robbing others of their all, even of the affection of their wives, if it does not cost them too much. His punishment was severe, but I think that young Conkling did the cause of morality a genuine service by proving to the world that no matter how prosperous may be the path of villians of this kind, there is yet a day of reckoning. Conkling will of course be discharged as he ought to be.

Meanwhile we are all praying for fine weather for Easter Sunday, in order that our ladies may not be deprived of the glory of coming out in their "loves" of Easter bonnets. Milliners in all parts of the city, fashionable and otherwise have been busy this whole week in filling orders. In some establishment the poor working girls have been kept busy as late as eleven and twelve o'clock at night. The florists too have been rushed with orders. A leading dealer in Flora's products told me that not in all his experience were churches and private individuals doing so much in the way of decoration as this year. Floral ornamentation has come to be as much an adjunct of Easter as holly and mistletoe of Christmas, and he estimated that this year close on $100,000 would be spent for this purpose. Jewelers and other dealers in fancy goods and knick-knacks are also forcing the fashion of making Easter presents on us, and their labor is not so difficult, as they are encouraged in their enterprises by the gentle sex. Verily the career of the young man who would flutter about the fair ones is getting more and more difficult. What with Easter presents, Christmas presents, New Year offerings, Valentines, balls, the opera, theatre, his pockets will soon cease to be a necessary part of his clothing.

A forthcoming literary novelty which will make its appearance in a month or so, is a social novel which has for its author one of the brightest and cleverest women in society. There is a flutter in Murray Hill over the event, for the lady, while still young, handsome and of course fond of being appreciated at her worth, is the dead enemy of hypocrisy which is the cement of modern society. It is understood in this work of hers, she rubs off some of the tinsel, and paint with which this cement is covered, and and draws some characters so life like that their real identity cannot be mistaken. For this reason everybody looks guilty and fearful, and the belles and beaux await the forthcoming book with as much eagerness as pater familias awaits the newspapers the morning after he has had a box at the French ball.

The honors, which ought to have been paid long ago to Barney, the eminent German tragedian, by the members of his own profession are at last forthcoming. He was breakfasted the other afternoon by the leading members of the dramatic fraternity, and the following day he returned the compliment by giving a professional matinee. The house was packed with actors and actresses, Barrett and Lester Wallack occupying the two proscenium boxes. He appeared in a light farce from the French entitled "From the Opera Comique," and in two acts from King Lear, and in [illegible] scenes from Julius Cæsar.

The Port Huron W. C. T. U. ladies petition the city council to enforce the law against billiard, pool and card tables in places where liquor is sold, referred to mayor and city attorney.

The Bay City Tribune says that probably every other man in that place, church members included, carries concealed weapons. In the same issue it also says: "The church life of Bay City is a healthy one."

A stock company is organizing at Ypsilanti to utilize the mineral water recently discovered there, and which has already performed wonderful cures, as rheumatism, paralysis, cancer and dyspepsia.

The "noisiest" wedding on record occurred in Jackson county on Wednesday. Irving Miller and Miss Emma A. Treffrey; the ceremony witnessed by a delegation from the Central city, bride, groom and delegation all deaf-mutes.

John Mahoney, who has been reported as skipping from Roscommon leaving $15,000 to $30,000 debts unprovided for, has more recently gone from Muskegon with $5,000 which he was to pay over as contractor, to those employed under him.

Of the 360 baptist churches in Michigan 28 per cent. are pastorless, 56 have been without additions by baptism for a year, 22 per cent. do not contribute to either of the five objects of denominational benevolence, and only nine per cent. contribute to them all.

Dr. Hurd, of the Pontiac insane asylum thinks employment of some sort should be made obligatory on all able-bodied patients. He would not have the labor compulsory, as in penal institutions, but would have the patients understand it is expected, and encourage them to it by the bestowment of gifts.

American Newspapers in 1883.

From the new edition of Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co's American Newspaper Directory, which is now in press, it appears that the newspapers and periodicals of all kinds issued in the United States and Territories now reach the imposing total of 11,196. This is an increase of 585 in twelve months. Taking the states one by one, the newspaper growth in some is very considerable. The present total in New York state for instance is 1,399—a gain of 80 in the past year. The increase in Pennsylvania is 48, the existing number being 943. Nebraska's total grew from 175 to 201, and Illinois from 890 to 904. A year ago Massachusetts had 420 papers; now the number is 438. In Texas the new papers outnumbered the suspensions by 8, and Ohio now has 738 papers instead of 692. The most remarkable change has occurred in the Territories, in which the daily papers have grown from 43 to 63, and the weeklies from 169 to 243 Dakota being the chief area of activity. The number of monthlies throughout the country grew from 976 to 1,034, while the dailies leaped from 996 to 1,062. The figures given above are exclusively of Canada which possesses a total of 606. It is interesting to note that the newly settled regions of the Canadian North-West are productive of newspapers as well as of wheat, for the number of journals issued in Manitoba was nearly doubled during the year.

J. R. Morrison and daughter of Toledo, were in town yesterday.

Remember to register next Saturday, if you want to vote next Monday.

The HERALD Job Rooms have turned out a large number of auction bills lately.

Adrian and Hudson will be connected by telephone, probably before the first of May.

Hudson people will witness the great drama of "Hazel Kirke" next Saturday evening.

James DePuy, Esq., of New York, spent last Sabbath with his nephew, Frank DePuy, of Macon.

Mrs. C. M. Burlingame left Tecumseh on Monday for a two week's visit with relatives at Coldwater.

It is hoped that at some period, however remote, real genuine spring weather will arrive this way.

Miss Mollie Weisinger, of Deerfield, will accept a position as clerk in Anderson's dry goods store of this village.

Ben. Reynolds returned from his Texas trip last Saturday. He made a good sale, and naturally feels in good humor.

The telephone line from Adrian to Toledo will be constructed at an early day. Blissfield can secure a connection for $800.

L. F. Wheeler has arrived home with his "Rambles" and takes a few weeks' rest preparatory to starting out on a summer's campaign.

Next Saturday Jim Cole, the live market man, will have a full assortment of early vegetables, such as lettuce, radishes, pie-plant, &c.

What year was it that the voters of Tecumseh went to town meeting in sleighs? Some say it was forty years ago and some say it was in 1840.

The peach crop in this section is gone up. There is no doubt about that. Owners of peach orchards are fearful that a large proportion of the trees are killed also.

A large whale is ashore near Baltimore, and the Courier-Journal maliciously remarks that Providence always sends the Baltimore editors some brain food every spring.

It is generally believed that the snow will be of great benefit to the growing wheat crop, as it will protect it from the alternate freezing and thawing common at this season of the year.

A good many Michigan girls are going to Dakota and taking up homesteads. That's all right, girls. 160 acres of land is worth more than half a dozen of the average young men of the day.

The Jonesville Independent has bought the Litchfield Gazette and will continue to publish it, doing the printing at Jonesville and having a resident editor at Litchfield. I. E. Frankhouser.

Easter on the 25th of March is a coincidence that no man living has seen. It was as far back as 1668, 1674, 1731 and 1742 that Easter came on the 25th of March. This coincidence is the first of its kind in our century, and will not take place again till 1894.

We understand that Rev. H. Shepard has received a call from one of the best Universalist parishes in Iowa. Mr. Shepard has done a good, noble work in Tecumseh, and should he accept the call we can but congratulate the parish that shall receive his labors.

We have heard a great deal said about the new fangled five-cent piece, and how people palmed it off for five dollars in gold. Great heavens, but wouldn't we like to have one of 'em, even if we couldn't pass it for more than five cents! Say, will subscriber—but never mind, it is asking too much.

The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad has issued a neat pamphlet called "The Heart of the Continent," being a historical and descriptive treatise of those parts of the western states traversed by that railroad. It contains a large amount of statistical information, and will be mailed to any address for two 3 cent stamps by Percival Lowell, Gen. Pas. Agent, Chicago, Ill.

A citizen would like to know where the marshal and his assistant keep themselves on Saturday evening after 9 o'clock. Their services were needed last Saturday night near the post office where the sidewalk was crowded with a motley crowd, some of whom had been drinking and were swearing and threatening each other. This is not the first time that an officer was not in sight when greatly needed to preserve order. Too many drunken men are permitted to prowl the streets, especially on Saturday nights.

John R. Clark is home again.

Henry Smith, Jr., of Toledo, was in town Monday.

Jas. H. Tribou was home last Sunday and Monday.

Slayton & Son are soon to build an addition to their warehouse.

Chas Parkell made his Tecumseh friends a short call last Monday.

A gang of depot builders will commence work on the M. & O. road next month.

Mr. Sparks is putting a mortlock on his block on Chicago street, and will soon make other improvements.

The West side school at Blissfield will give a box reception at Carpenter's hall on Saturday evening next.

Miss Niles, of London, Canada, a neice of Mrs. Tiffany's, is spending a few days with the latter in Tecumseh.

The Tecumseh postoffice was closed between the hours of two and five yesterday afternoon out of respect to the memory of the late Postmaster General.

The meeting of the social club at Mrs. E. A. Tribou's last Monday eve. was a pleasant one. The club will be entertained next Thursday evening by Miss Elida James.

B. F. Reynolds, E. G. Wilson, Carl Berger, Ed. Learnard, Peleg Chase and Peleg Bowerman all came home from Texas last week safe and sound and report a good time.

If you wish to buy a farm or a village house and lot, call at the HERALD office and learn of the places we have to sell. We can accommodate any taste, and both flush and lean purses.

Up to the present time the groundhog is the most successful weather prophet of the year. The goose-bone ranks second, and it is nip and tuck between Wiggins, Vennor and the musk-rat for third place.

Rev. Joseph Cook will lecture in Adrian, on Thursday evening, April 5th, 1883, under the auspices of the Broad St. M. E. Sunday school. Subject of the lecture will be "Probation after death." Arrangements will be made to hold the train till after the lecture.

The Tecumseh Bible Society auxiliary to the American Bible Society will hold a union service in the Presbyterian church of this village on Sabbath evening, April 1. Addresses of ten minutes each will be delivered on the following subjects:

"The effects of the bible on individual and national prosperity." Rev. W. H. Babbit.

"The bible in the home."

"What the bible does for people as citizens." P. S. McKinnon.

"The right of the people to the Holy Scriptures." Rev. R. S. Pardington.

A cordial invitation is extended to the public to attend this service.

The annual election of officers of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday school occurred on Monday evening, March 26, 1883, with the following result:

Superintendent—R. B. House, M. D.
Assistant—B. Hurry.
Secretary—Leila Doty.
Treasurer—Bert Hause.
Librarians—Elsworth Russell, Frank Potter, Viola Zeluff.
Organist—Eunice Davidson.

The school is in a highly prosperous condition in all its departments. The average attendance during the year has been a trifle less than 200. The preliminary steps are being taken toward getting a new library. One of the marked features of the school is the Pastor's Bible Class which has an average attendance of 40.

Duprez & Benedict's minstrels will be at the opera house April 10. Read what the Daily Evening Post of Salem, Mass., says of the company:

Duprez & Benedict's gigantic minstrels appeared at Mechanic Hall last evening. The hall was filled, for an entertainment so early in the season, the audience being composed of the best class of play-going people. The entertainment was first-class in every particular, the company being a strong one. The olio business was excellent, nearly every point being encored by the audience. The local bits were numerous and were well received. The Cottonfield Belles and Silver-Shower Cloggists were equal to anything in this line ever produced in Salem. The discipline of the company was excellent, the members playing together well, and, as this is their fourth appearance this season, their success with the public argues well for their enthusiastic reception wherever they may go during the season.

The new postal note which congress authorized at its last session will be ready for issue in September next. The note is to be bought like a postage stamp, payable to bearer in any amount from three cents to $5. It will be about the size of the ordinary greenback. The model proposed by the Postoffice Department, which was submitted to the Postal Committee of the House, had at the right hand two columns giving the month of the year and the dates of twelve years, beginning with 1883. At the left hand are three columns of figures, one representing dollars numbered up to four; a second, representing dimes numbered up to nine; a third, representing cents numbered up to nine, each series ending with a cipher. The postmaster at the office issuing the note will punch the month and the year, the number of dollars, dimes, and cents in their respective columns, thus preventing any alteration of the amounts or date.

The fishing season has opened at St. Joseph.

A. A. Kennedy returned from Minnesota yesterday.

Chet Brownson has tested his lease of David Service's farm, and will stay four years more.

Leroy Mead, of Macon, recently deceased, was one of the few remaining veterans of the "Old Fourth."

The measles have got into the west side Blissfield school and it raises hob with the per cent. of attendance.

The Democratic caucus of Tecumseh will be held at the Council Building next Saturday afternoon, at two o'clock.

Dr. Catlin has placed a fine new matting upon his office floor, and will soon ornament the rooms further with a lot of new furniture.

The Governor has designated Thursday the 26th day of April as "Arbor Day" and recommends its general observance throughout the state.

Miss Hayden and Mr. F. Hillman, of the Tecumseh instrumental quartette, will furnish music on the occasion of the "Blunder" lecture to-morrow eve.

Be sure and read the millinery advertisement of Mrs. A. E. Ure on our first page. She has a large stock of goods and is selling them at very low prices.

Rev. C. E. Conley goes to Manchester this afternoon to address the Washtenaw Foreign Missionary conference which begins this evening and lasts over to-morrow.

Hause will serve up warm biscuit and hot maple sugar on Monday eve. next, April 2. Be sure that you call with your girl and pull maple wax.—Room for all, both old and young.

Peter Kishpaugh, of Clinton, has returned from Ohio lately and brought with him a car load of fine young farm horses, and it will pay men who take an interest in such stock to visit his stables and inspect the lot.

Willis Merritt is still confined to the house with a serious bronchial trouble. We made him a call last evening and found him about the house and feeling encouraged. His physicians have no doubt of his full recovery with the return of warm weather.

Adrian Record: The Tecumseh HERALD thinks the Adrian grocer, who gives a pail of sauer kraut to each customer and a cent besides, will have to do a big business to make anything. The HERALD should know that the scent is in the kraut. It is if the kraut is good.

The Dakota fever seems to be raging in and about Lapeer City. Judging from incidents of the past, there are now well to do farmers about to join this exodus, who will, when too late, cry out: "Oh! why were my eyes blinded by the vain delusions of untold wealth in foreign lands?" There is wholesome advice in that old song, "Stay at home, Johnny, don't go."

Dr. Myatt Keyan, of Rangoon, Burmah, is expected to occupy the Baptist pulpit in this village next Sunday evening. This gentleman is a converted Koren. He came to this country and to Michigan about thirteen years ago. During this entire period he has been fitting himself by study to return to his people as a medical missionary, spending the first nine years at Kalamazoo college, and the last four in the medical department of our state university. When he arrived on our shores he was penniless. Notwithstanding this he has prosecuted his studies to his graduation, relying entirely upon his own energy. As in his student life, so in his missionary life, he proposes to pay his own way. He returns to his native land this spring or in early summer. The lecture will be on the customs, habits and needs of his people. A cordial invitation is given.

The route is as yet undetermined between Toledo and Britt[illegible] it is probable that when it is th[illegible] will be at least two stations between these points. There will doubtless be a stop between Marshall and Homer in Eckford, but it is not yet decided.

Marshall Statesman: The Kalamazoo Telegraph's Allegan correspondent reports facts showing the great enhancement of real estate values, caused by the advent of the new railroad. The growth of the place in business, population and wealth has taken a new impetus, one that will endure. The effect at Marshall has been of a similar character, and if anything, still more extensive. The real estate market has been more active here than in any other like town in Michigan.

DIED.

BREWER—Friday evening, March 16th, of typhoid fever, Miss Anna Brewer, only daughter of Horace Brewer, late of this place.

Thus suddenly has closed a beautiful life which, from its dawn to its ending, was passed in our midst. None anlong us held in a higher degree the love and esteem of our people. In every relation of life she met its responsibilities with courage and gentleness. At the end of her student's course in our high school she pursued her studies for a few terms in the young ladies seminary at Kalamazoo. She possessed an ardent love for music, vocal and instrumental, and her labors in attaining greater proficiency in these were evidence of her remarkable perseverance. She was identified with our Presbyterian church as a beloved member, as a teacher for some years in our Sunday school and in the choir, leading us with the melody of her voice in the service of song. Endowed with great sweetness of disposition, she had sympathies ever ready and warm and a most lovely and unassuming character. At home she was untiring in her ministrations of love; especially was this manifested during the long illness of her beloved father, which proved to be his last, and in the loving care and consistent thoughtfulness with which she soothed away her mother's grief. Those who knew her most intimately and had the privilege of calling her friend will miss her sorely, and will grieve long, even though they feel the assurance that through Christ she has been admitted to a place in one of the many Mansions, and is rejoicing in that life which is so much "more wonderful than all the golden fancies of all our golden dreams." Long shall we remember the sorrowful scene in church the Sunday following her death—the tear-filled eyes of many friends, her vacant chair draped with mourning in the choir, and the hymns sung commemorative of our loss.

And now, while we extend our deepest sympathy to those she loved so well, shall not they and we be comforted in the remembrance that this lovely and completed life is safe forevermore in our Father's house.

WARING—At Ridgeway, on Saturday evening, March 17, 1883, Joshua Waring, aged 75 years.

The birthplace of the deceased was Ulster county, New York, where a greater part of his minority was passed. In the spring of 1832 he married Ruth Ann Lockwood. Two years later they came west, first settling in Raisin township, this county, but a few months later purchased and took possession of a tract of land, in what was better known in the past as the English settlement, Ridgeway township, which could only be reached by an Indian trail after several miles of travel through the wilderness. Thirty-two years of industry and economy made an enviable home around which are still entwined many pleasant remembrances. In 1866 the deceased changed his residence to the village of Ridgeway where the remainder of the family still reside. In his 23d year he professed faith in Christ and became a member of the M. E. church which continued to be his home throughout his life, being an official member for fifty years. Of the class he first joined in Michigan, which was quite large, there are but three surviving members. The faithful exercise of his talent for sacred song was a power in religious service—cheering many a heart. His last song at family worship, the morning of the last day, was "All hail the power of Jesus name." Much that would be highly commendable might be said of his characteristics and qualities, but his many friends and acquaintances understand this much better than the words at our command could express. Although confined to an invalid's chair for many months his suffering was not severe until the last twelve hours, when it became intense thro' inflammation. He had long wished for the hour of dissolution, and when the messenger came it was received by him as a friend rather than an enemy. The widow and two sons are all that remain of the immediate family, and they have the sympathy and prayers of many friends.

COM.

HAND—In Macon, March 7th, 1883, of cancer in the stomach, Mr. Edmund Hand, in the 70th year of his age.

The deceased was born in Hancock, Berk Co., Mass., where the most of his early life was spent. On the 3d of March, 1836, he was united in marriage to Harriet N. Smith and emigrated immediately to Michigan, which was then an almost unbroken wilderness. He purchased a farm in the town of Macon, there building up a home, at which himself or some member of his family has since resided. There together with his wife he bore the trials and privations incident to pioneer life. In this home they reared their children—three sons and three daughters, all of whom with the mother followed him to his last resting place. In 1838 Mr. Hand made a profession of religion and joined the M. E. church, where he has since remained an acceptable member. His illness was a long and painful one, which he bore with Christian patience and fortitude. But his last hours were peaceful; truly "He giveth his beloved sleep." He was buried from his home on Saturday, March 10. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. A. De Spelder.

H. N. H.

MEAD—At his home in Macon, Mr. Leroy Mead, on the 21st of March, 1883. He had reached his fifty-first year in January last.

His birthplace was North Salem, Westchester Co., New York. In the autumn of 1860 he came to this state. The next year, at the outbreak of the rebellion, he responded to the call for volunteers, being one of the first who went from Macon township. He enlisted in the 4th Reg't Mich. Infantry. His record as a soldier has often been spoken of with praise by his companions in arms. Being of a jovial disposition, he did much to enliven the spirits of others, which of itself was good soldierly service in those trying days, and which his fellow soldiers have never ceased to appreciate. His conduct on the battle field as a soldier and lieutenant has also received honorable mention. In one of the battles he was severely wounded. After the war he returned to Macon, where he has since followed the occupation of a farmer. He has shown himself to be a good citizen and was highly esteemed by his neighbors and friends. On the 20th of February, 1867, he was joined in marriage to Josephine Clark son, who, together with two children survives him. Two other children his oldest and his youngest, he had been called upon to lay in the grave within the last three years. On Friday, March 23, the funeral took place. As was appropriate, it was largely in charge of former soldiers. Capt. H. W. Stevens, of Co. I, 18th Mich. Inf. superintended. The pall bearers were Capt. A. D. Lawrence, of the 9th Mich. Cav.; J. W. Cook, of the 18th Mich. Inf.; Wm. C. Jordan, also of the 18th; Frank Gilmore and James Lang, both of Mr. Mead's Reg't, the 4th, and Jehiel Davidson, of the 26th. The services were held at the late home of the deceased and were conducted by Rev. J. A. De Spelder of the Reformed church.

Ann Arbor Argus: Of those men closing out their business because trade has not been satisfactory, two have not adapted to it, and the third but little. Herein is a lesson which ought to be profitable to those remaining, for such of our tradesmen as have judiciously used the columns of a reputable and well established newspaper have prospered and consequently made money.

HIEROGLYPHICS.

Curiosities of Written Language—Chinese Symbols.

Jas. C. Eward in Phrenological Journal.

The first attempt made at writing was [illegible] rude representation of the subject meant to be depicted. Thus a figure of the sun was made to denote that luminary. A figure of a [illegible] of a dog meant the animal represented. In process of time, when knowledge increased, the attempt was made to express in this manner abstract ideas, as well as [illegible] ... These delineations were more [illegible] ... Right, the figure of the sun, because the original [illegible] ... a hoe, courage of a lion, cunning of a fox, fidelity and so on. Ingratitude was denoted by a viper; impudence by a fly; wisdom by an ant; victory by a crane; a man universally shunned was an eel, which was supposed to be never found in company with any other fish. A still farther advance took place in knowledge caused these delineations to become too voluminous, every new object or thing requiring a new picture. This induced the delineator to abridge the representation, retaining only so much of each thing as would express the idea intended. Thus, instead of an accurate drawing of a lion, or a slight sketch or more general figure of that animal was made, and for a serpent merely a crooked line like the letter S.

As writing advanced from pictures of visible objects to symbolical hieroglyphs of things invisible from this latter it advanced to arbitrary marks which stood for objects and ideas which bore no resemblance or analogy to the thing signified. Of this nature are the characters now in use in China and Japan. In these countries they have no alphabet of letters to represent sounds of simple sounds, but the characters used stand for things, actions, or ideas. The number of these characters must be equal to correspond to the whole number of words employed in speech. It is a language difficult to write, and it is the work of years to learn them all. Very few of the learned men know the half of them, and it is thus that great progress has been made when after forty or fifty years of hard study one has mastered 15,000 or 20,000 of them. The Chinese, Japanese, Tonquinese, and Corean, though each speak a different tongue, use the same written characters.

They are thus able to correspond with each other, though one nation is ignorant of the spoken language of the others. This is comparable evidence that the characters they use stand for things rather than for words, the same as the figures 1, 2, 3 represent quantities in numbers of the same kind, but these quantities are expressed in the same different methods, and which, on being presented to the eye, are understood by those who have agreed upon the signification of them, and the value attached to each, whether English, French, German or Spanish, but each the speech of each of these people may differ from that of the others.

ADDISON ATOMS.

On the afternoon of Friday, March 30th, the citizens of western Cambridge and eastern Woolstock were shocked by the report that one of their neighbors, Mr. John Dowling had committed suicide by hanging, and hastily repairing to his place of residence the statements were proven to be only too true. The following particulars were obtained by a HERALD reporter from parties first at the scene of the tragedy. Mr. Dowling was a man about 30 years of age and worked a farm near Prospect Hill. He had shown slight signs of insanity at times, especially concerning himself, evinced much dissatisfaction with his condition, and several times during the winter became so despondent as to intimate suicidal intentions to his wife. She thinking it best to keep the matter secret however, allowed them to pass as quietly as possible, until the date above mentioned, when he accomplished his purpose. He took luncheon at 10½ o'clock A.M., and shortly after left the house as if to resume work, but not putting in an appearance at 5 P.M., his wife went to the barn to call him, but what was her horror on entering the dimly lighted basement to see the partially exposed body of her husband hanging by a cord from a beam above, and cold in death. The screams of the terrified woman were heard for miles, and neighbors hastening to learn the cause, soon found her statements only too well substantiated. Funeral services were performed over the remains on Sunday at Norvell, and kind friends are doing all in their power for the grief stricken wife and two little ones. The shock received by Mrs. Dowling was so severe as to greatly prostrate her nervous faculties. Physicians report her case as not dangerous however.

A BIRTHDAY PARTY.

On the evening of March 24, a number of friends and relatives assembled at the residence of Mr. & Mrs. D. Seaman of Franklin to surprise them and celebrate their daughter Alice's birthday. We took possession of the parlor at 8 o'clock, bringing with us our games, and all were enjoying the same when it was announced by one of the party, that while we had enjoyed ourselves thus far, we thought we would increase the pleasure of the occasion by presenting Miss Alice with a gift, consisting of a beautiful photograph album, and wished her to keep it as a remembrance and token of our friendship. At the same time Mr. Anson Ayres was happily surprised (as it was his birthday) with a gift consisting of a cup and saucer. Hoping he would enjoy his coffee and tea, and not desire anything more stimulating. Supper was then announced, which to say the least was heartily enjoyed. After supper was over music was the principle source of pleasure for a short time. Suddenly we bethought ourselves it was Sunday, and we ought to be at home, that mirth could not last forever. Bidding our friends good-night, and many happy birthdays, we were soon speeding homeward. A glorious full moon and the snow creaking under the wheels betokening a still cold night.

ARTEST.

FIRE AT DEERFIELD.

A disastrous fire occurred at Deerfield last Friday night which swept away eight buildings in the business portion of the town, and caused a loss of about $14,000. The buildings burned were all wooden structures on the west side of the main street, from the brick block south to River street. A portion of the loss is covered by insurance, but the loss will still be heavy. The following named parties sustain losses:

G. V. Bailey & Co., general store
L. Ormsby, two buildings.
E. A. Burton, building.
Miss McLaughlin, confectionery and postoffice.
Odd Fellows Lodge, furniture
W. F. Hood & Co., drug store
D. F. Griswold, two buildings
J. Manning, grocery store.
S. Bloomfield, building.
E. A. Burton, meat market
R. Diver, building.
Diver & McWilliams, hardware store.
Miss E. C. Henica, building and millinery stock.
Dr. Wood, office furniture.

The origin of the fire is a mystery, but those who gave the alarm claim to have heard an explosion loud enough to be heard two squares away, which might have been the bursting of an oil tank.

The wool growers of Franklin will meet at Tuttle's hall to transact important business on Saturday eve., April 7th. All are invited.

Deerfield Record: The Easter Sunday offering in W. F. Hood's household, was a nine pound baby girl.—Her birthday will not occur on Easter Sunday again, although she lives to be a centenarian.

Higgins, of Hudson, has got into trouble for soliciting guests on the R. R. grounds in that village. He had two trials and was convicted the last time, and was compelled to "anti-up" to the tune of $10 fine and $40 costs.

Adrian Press: Ogden Center yearns for a good shoemaker; two cobblers have become rich land owners, and have left the bench for a seat on sulky plows and mowing machines. Now they want a man who will peg away to save soles, and stick to the last. That's awl.

Morenci Observer: Last week a little eight year old son of Fletcher Bishop of Chesterfield, had one of his legs broken just below the thigh by the kick of a horse. It seems that he went into the stable and somehow the horse became scared and commenced kicking in the most violent manner, and it was almost a miracle that the little fellow was not instantly killed.

Morenci Observer: Last Tuesday the farewell words were spoken to numerous friends who took their departure for Dakota. Seven cars loaded to their utmost capacity, bore the household goods, farming utensils, and the thousand and one articles needed by the emigrants to their destination in the new Eldorado of the West.

The Hudson Post gives some figures on the "going to town meeting in cutters" controversy. "Forty years ago next Monday town meeting was held at the barn of Uncle John Colwell. The snow was over two feet deep and so hard that people could travel over it across the lots and through the woods to the polls. Some changes since then—the snow has gone, and the old settlers too.

On Saturday afternoon, March 34th, about 25 sheep breeders of Lenawee, Jackson and Washtenaw counties assembled in the directors' room of the Peoples' Bank, Manchester, according to adjournment and organized a Southern Michigan Sheep Breeders' Association, and elected the following officers: President, James M. Kress, Bridgewater; Vice President, Henry C. Calhoun, Bridgewater; Secretary, Charles M. Fellows, Sharon; Treasurer, Thomas VanGieson, Bridgewater; Directors, J. M. Horning, Norvell; C. C. Dorr, Sharon, and J. M. Moore, Manchester. The first annual sheep shearing festival will be held in Manchester on Saturday, April 21.

ARBOR DAY, 1883.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF MICHIGAN:

At a session of the Legislature for the year 1881 the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That his Excellency the Governor be and is hereby requested to call attention of the people of the State to the importance of planting trees for ornament, protection and shade, by naming a day upon which this work shall be given special prominence, to be known and designated as "Arbor Day."

While, in view of the economic and climatic advantages, the importance of tree planting can hardly be over estimated, Arbor Day would seem more especially designed for such planting as will lend to make our home surroundings more comfortable and pleasing.

The attractiveness it adds to the home is no small argument in its favor, indeed, the difference between a home shaded by trees, furnishing delicious fruits in their season, and whose branches echo the songs of birds, and one where scarcely a tree softens the surroundings, may be the influence which shall attract the young to home enjoyments, and thus save them from perilous temptation.

In passing through the State I have observed with great regret that but little attention is given to the planting of trees in school grounds, indeed, the absence of trees is one of the surest indications that a building is used for school purposes. Let me therefore ask that in this year 1883, especial attention may be paid to the planting of trees near the school buildings. The school and the home, where the characters of the young are so largely molded, should in this respect receive equal care and attention.

Now therefore, pursuant to the foregoing resolution, I do hereby designate Thursday, the 26th day of April 1883, to be known as "Arbor Day," and recommend the general observance of the same throughout the State.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State to be hereunto affixed at Lansing, this 22d day of March, 1883.

(L. S.) JOSIAH W. BEGOLE.

By the Governor:

HARRY A. CONANT,

PECK'S BAD BOY AND HIS PA.

BY GEORGE W. PECK, author of "Peck's Fun," "Peck's Sunshine," etc., etc. Illustrated with twenty full-page illustrations by Dean Smith. Cloth, black and gold, $1; paper covers, 50 cents.

George W. Peck is admitted, by common consent, to be one of America's Greatest Humorists. His former books, "Fun" and "Sunshine," have won for him a continental renown. But his last book is undoubtedly his masterpiece. Peck's Bad Boy is a "holy terror." He is full from top to toe of pure, unadulterated cussedness. He hungers and thirsts after mischief. He lies awake nights inventing schemes of deviltry, and rises with the lark to put them into execution. The sight of him makes the grocery man tired every time. He leads his poor Pa the life of a dog one day and of a martyr the next. He makes his Pa a nuisance in church, a fool at home, and a laughing stock to the world. Nothing escapes his attention; nothing is too commonplace and nothing too sacred for him to make the occasion of some diabolical joke. Fishing, skating, making New Year's calls, or rambling in the woods in summer, it is all the same. He is evidently possessed of a whole legion of devils. He is without doubt the very worst boy ever born in America. And yet he is the most popular boy in America today. The boys read of his escapades and regard him as a greater hero than George Washington. The girls read this book and think the way the Bad Boy got even with his sister was just splendid. Fathers read it and sigh. Old bachelors read it and thank heaven they have no boys. Ministers smuggle them into their studies and nearly choke themselves with vain attempts to suppress their merriment. Aged spinsters read it and, unaccustomed to the laughter it compels, begin at once to grow fat. Everybody reads it. It is the most popular book of the age. The illustrations are most graphic and suggestive. The artist, who is one of the "Old Masters" of Chicago, has caught the author's humor, and his sketches greatly enhance the value of the book. The picture of the Bad Boy's Pa fighting the hornets, or descending by his patent fire-escape, or receiving the salute of the Royal Bomper, reveal the very heart of the author's humor. The book, which is just out, is for sale by all book sellers, or mailed post paid, on receipt of price, by Belford, Clark & Co., Publishers, Chicago.

Thomas Clarkson, a brakeman for Conductor Matt Loop, on the Lake Shore, met with a most serious accident last night at Blissfield. He fell between the cars and his right leg was crushed below the knee, and his left foot was quite badly injured. Dr. Rynd, of this city, was at once notified, who met the train at the depot here and proceeded to Clayton, the home of Clarkson, where assisted by Dr. Eaton and Frank Wood of this city, he amputated the leg and left the sufferer as comfortable as possible. We understand that Clarkson owns a farm in Dover and is a married man.—Adrian Record.

The old established jewelry house of H. T. Cook & Co., 137 Summit St., Toledo, have an advertisement in this week's HERALD. It will pay any of our readers to give them a call when they visit the city.

Helen Preston.

"Are there no underwriters for human hopes? for the most precious of interests is there no insurance?"

I had been tempted all day, tempted by fate and the devil. All summer long I had been trying to clasp hands for a life journey with a man I did not love; a man noble of soul and born to the purple, who set up his high disdain against my poor gifts of beauty and song. He threw some love into the scales, too, but I, God help me, had none to give in return. I had barbaric eyes, pile my whole possessions for a long glance of a dark eye, and my pride had some to protest.

Could I—could I? It kept wallowing me about with fateful persistency, for, to night I was to give my answer to my high-born lover.

I tried to look things in the face, so solemn the test.

Money was a good thing; it insured once warmth in winter and delicious coolness in summer, and preciousness and daintiness, and the entrance into good society. Yes, money was a good thing, and position and power, and houses and lands. So far good; but my soul hungered and thirsted for a love commensurate with my own, which this man, who offered me purple and gold, had it not in his power to give, or let me qualify that, had it not in his nature to give.

The stars came out golden and soft, and the fragrant summer dusk crept around me as I sat inhaling the scent of the roses. Ambition and love tore my heart by turn, and weariness, too, put in a poor pitiful plea, for I was so tired.

It was a brilliant future that Reginald Dacre offered me, wherein toil and weariness could never come. I thought of the purple and fine linen; the luxurious rest; the entertainment. Then my dainty life passed in review before me—that of a companion to a haughty dowager, and a regular singer in a fashionable church, among fashionable saints and sinners. I began to croon over the old satire:

In a church which is garnished with niche and gable,
With altar and retables, with gargoyle and groin,
The penitents' dresses are sealskin and sable,
The odor of sanctity's cent de cologne.
But surely if Lucifer, flying from Hades,
Could gaze at this crowd, with its paniers and paints,
He would say, looking round at the lords and the ladies,
"O where is All Sinners if this is All Saints?"

I had cutered upon this life from an unloved and unloving home, a home doled out to me by the tardy justice of a granduncle who had robbed me of my inheritance. I thought at first I might find the sangreal somewhere in this new country, which seemed so fair, but alas! I had not even heard the swish of wings.

I thought of it all—the fervor and the fret; the petty jars; the misunderstandings; the pain of incomprehension; the unguerdoned toil; the lagging hours; the awful pauses.

This or marriage; this or marriage. It seemed written like a placard on earth and sky. I seemed bound like phylactery upon the brows of the people as they passed to and fro; and soon the word marriage lost all its significance for me, as words do after oft repeating. Did it mean misery or happiness, bliss or woe? This marriage that rang its changes through my brain—was it God-appointed? Did it mean God's blessing or His curse?

You know I did not love this man who offered me rest from my labors. He had not power to evoke one thrill at his call. But then love is only one reason why one should marry a man. There might be love and plenty of money, and yet one go hungry all one's life. I have known such things.

I had tried to make my life straight and fair. I had tried to keep clean hands and a pure heart; tried—God, who knows the secrets of all hearts, knows this—to fight despair.

Long green days,
Worn bare of grass and sunshine, long calm nights
From which the sikon sleeps were freted out—
Be witness for me.

We see through shadows all our life long. We come into this world without our being given a choice as to our advent, and go out of it in the same manner.

We have not been consulted as to birth or death. More and more the prayer of Epictetus haunts me: "Lead me, Zeus and Destiny, whithersoever I am appointed to go, I will follow without wavering, even though I turn coward and shrink, I shall have to follow all the same."

Should I marry Mr. Dacre? Was he a good man? As the world said, "Too good for me, as my lady elegantly phrased it.

I had been born into the world amid fierce throes of mental anguish. Through the pain of her travail my mother's heart was rent with the greater pain of my father's sudden death—drowned off the Cornish coast, for I was born at sea. She lived until I was 10 years old, a life of sorrow, and poverty, and renunciation. Then she died, leaving me to a compassionate world and my uncle.

My life dragged, on the clogged wheels. I was always at war with my surroundings. Though too proud to express it, I had never realized my ideal of womanhood, or in any way grown up to my aspirations and dreams. If I had grown at all it had been through pain and repression—a fatal thing always for a warm-hearted, earnest woman.

My uncle, Edward Earl, had procured me the friendship of the lady in whose house I had passed a twelvemonth—Mrs. Lucien Granger, a distant cousin of her own. I was an unsalaried governess or companion, our remote consanguinity being always made available by my uncle. It was during my residence with that lady that my fate came to me. A young nephew of Mrs. Granger's came to the hall. He was an artist, young and handsome, and fresh from a four year's sojourn in Rome.

I need not worry you with the prologue or the epilogue of our love, for words are so poor to express the heart's utterance. O golden day! O tender, passionate nights! O princely heart, come back to me!

Alan Leighton was the last son of a high-born family, and he counted the blue blood—the united blood of all the Howards—flowing in his veins. Mrs. Granger interposed her veto against our love, dreading, doubtless, the plebeian admixture of mine.

It is a pity that blood does not always tell. It was an ignoble triumph to me—to still a triumph—to bare my white arms to the shoulder during our gala nights—to which my voice was always invited—contrasting their satiny smoothness and perfect contour with the dark brown appendages of Mrs. Granger folded over her aristocratic heart.

But a cloud crept into the sky, and its shadow fellow across our path.

Alan was called suddenly by telegram to England, where his grandfather lay dying. We had but a moment for our farewells, for Alan's heart was rent with sorrow, and I helped to expedite his departure.

But one letter ever reached me. His father was dead, and he was Sir Alan now.

My Precious Helen: My father, whom I loved and respected above all men, died yesterday. I need not tell you how desolate we feel, and how the light seems to have died out of every nook and corner. My dear mother is prostrated with the blow which has taken away the lover of her youth, and I shall not be able to return to you for some weeks. Announce our betrothal, dearest to my aunt and uncle, which you know was my intention the very night I was called away. Be true to me, my darling Helen, as I shall be true to you. Good-night, dear love, I shall write at length as soon as mother and I have matured our plans for her lonely future. Good-night, good-night. May angels guard you, and may the good Father fold about you his everlasting arms. Your friend and lover, Alan Leighton.

Two years had dragged their slow length about since that letter came, and I had never heard from Alan, though craving his presence as the prisoner craves the sunshine. I had written him once, and I had regretted even that. "He was soon to be wedded to an earl's handsome daughter," Mrs. Granger read aloud from an open letter in her hand; "in fact, it was an old affair, prior to his visit to the hall," etc., etc.

How I regretted I had written, though the words had been few, merely asking if he had been enabled to procure me a certain book we had made mention of together, and the time was more than a year ago when I had the right thus to address him. And now, O pitiful Christ! another woman was to be his wife, and I must never think of the old days, or the old dreams, or look into his dark eyes or feel his kisses upon my mouth. Never, and I might live fifty years.

And O the pity of it out of all this world's million possibilities I had only the chance of two—either to wed Reginald Dacre, a man old enough to be my father, or to be a companion to some haughty woman. I had blunded upon accepting Mr. Dacre. The day some days barely two days I had stood below the window of a book it was an highly enlightened creed.

But alas! but alas! I had thought him so true, so noble. I had called him "my prince," "my king," alone in the warm dusk under the stars.

"I will not call thy purple with my rags," I had whispered in my heart. "Nor breathe my prayer on thy Venice glass." I went down to the sea to listen to its sullen roar, lest it tell its tale of human misery, of hearts dead under its waves, of souls and bodies wrecked on ghastly beds of moss; of kisses gone down, with a wail, in human misery that I longed. I tried to remember all this, so that mine might not seem such a great thing amid a world of sobbing and tears. It was a good thing to think of the sufferings of others, and try to ignore your own. A good thing. But my misery! the misery of the girl called Helen Preston!

This girl was somewhat of a genius, the people said. She possessed the gift of song, and she was handsome, the men said. And she had to sell her birthright for a mess of pottage. Had money enough to have utilized her gift of song she might have had three.

But she had sacrificed her soul, for, all her beauty and gifts, had been false to herself, to God and humanity, yes, too, to Reginald Dacre, for she kept her love for Alan locked in her heart.

"I have sold my soul for houses and lands," she said, "and I am wretched. Mea culpa! Mea culpa!"

"I have sold myself with open eyes," she said, "knowingly, with malice prepense. I have no one to blame. That Alan forgot his vows did not make it right that I should forswear myself."

But the sea with its fuss and fret, made my heart ache, and the turbulent water seemed wooing me thitherward. The chimes of our quaint old church, playing an old song, echoed echoed in my throat. I would go and invoke grand airs from the organ, and maybe I should forget the sea's roar.

It was my wont to go there to practice, and I knew the service would not be held for a half hour. The lights were turned down to a semi-darkness, and the old sexton, with whom I was a favorite, had left the key in the door for me. The moon shone across the organ keys and across my face, and the trailing folds of my white dress looked almost ghastly in its light. O quaint old church! O quaint old chimes! Too soon I would be far away from you, over the sea to my sailor's lordly home, carrying with me a heavier heart than my years should warrant.

But it was too late to look back; and the fault was mine. I had ruined my own life, and must pay the price. Because I had been forbidden the desire of mine eyes, I had sealed my fate. I had bound my hands, and had intoned Phoebe Cary's wailing words:

I have turned from the good gifts Thy bounty supplied me,
Because of the one which Thy wisdom denied me;
I have bandaged mine eyes—yes, mine own hands have bound me;
I have made me a darkness when light was around me.
Now I cry by the wayside, O Lord, that I might receive back my sight.

"Peccavi," I cried, and my head sank upon the organ and tears stained the red roses at my throat.

"Helen!" and my head was lifted gently and Alan Leighton's tender eyes met mine. "Alan!" was all my astonishment could utter.

"My girl, you have suffered," he ejaculated, in a tone of exquisite tenderness. "Helen, my first and only love, how we have been wronged. I only learned, an hour before I embarked, that you were not the false woman you had been painted to me. Mrs. Granger wrote me eighteen months ago that you had married Mr. Dacre, and left with him for Cuba. A subsequent letter, without date or signature, inclosing the tiny pearl pin I had given you, left me no room for doubt. I left England forever, and have been on the wing ever since, finding no rest for my heart on sea or shore. Helen, I suffered as few men suffer because of losing you, and because of your apparent falseness. But I could not waste my whole life because of a woman's untruth, so I tied up the broken threads and tried not to look back. It was by chance I met Egerman Sloan, and in the midst of mutual confidences he asked me why I had never returned to America and to the beautiful Helen Preston, who had declined all suiters, and was still unwed. Helen, I embarked that afternoon, and I am here, never to be parted from my darling. When will we be married, sweet?"

"Married! Alan," and the dreary present recurring to me, I withdrew myself from his arms, and almost unconsciously my lips framed the words:

I had died for this last year to know
You had loved me. Who shall turn on fate?
I care not if love come or go
Now; though your love seek mine for mate,
It is too late.

"Too late! Helen, my only love, explain your meaning for God's sake."

Then came a broken disjointed tale of my sorrow and temptation when I heard of his handsome and high-born bride; of my weariness of the hall; of Mrs. Granger; of myself, of Mr. Dacre's constant wooing, and at last of the little note only this night thrust between the leaves of his book, making Alan's coming forever too late for my happiness.

Rapid hoof-beats along the road, and my courtly lover came in sight.

"Saved! Alan," and my words came thick and fast.

"Engage him in conversation, Alan, regarding the hall, Mrs. Granger, the weather, stocks, etc., etc. I will escape by the vestry door, fly to the hall! secure the note! and then, O, Alan!"

"My darling, my bright darling!" but I broke from his clasp and sped away like a chamois to the hall. I did not heed that the roses fell from my throat, that a portion of my lace flounce graced a thornbush, or that my hair, unloosed from its fastenings, hung about my shoulders. I think if I had possessed a piece of paper I should have held it aloft, and shouted "a reprieve! a reprieve!"

Shall I try to tell of how I secured the note, and hid it in my bosom, of how I ran up-stairs and peeped for one moment into the mirror, twisting up my shining hair and trying to hush the loud beating of my heart, of how I rapidly traversed the path leading to the church, dodging behind an osage hedge to escape meeting Mr. Dacre, hurrying on as soon as I was free, to be folded close to Alan's heart?

"And you will not laugh at me, Alan?"

"Laugh at you, my darling, and wherefore?"

"Oh, for my mad flight, for the red roses scattered all along the road; for my unbounded joy at your return; for proposing to run and steal the note, and, and—things."

For answer came tender kisses pressed upon brow and lips, and closed eyes, and Mr. Lord Lovel (Mr. Dacre) rode forth from the castle gates alone.

A Sudden Overturn.

Youth's Companion.

In one of our small New England cities a rustic entered a church one Sunday evening, and took a seat near the pulpit. He was a tall, slouching, loose-jointed person, who found it as difficult to sit still as a restless child. He twisted about first one way, then another, stretched his long limbs at full length beneath the seats and then drew them up under his chin, until the audience became more interested in his contortions than in the minister's discourse.

The clergyman was at his wit's end. He could not turn the man out, and yet he saw that the sermon he had hoped to make impressive was falling upon deaf ears.

But worse was to follow.

The stranger, seeing an empty chair, rose, walked slowly over to it, seated himself and tilted it back with a deep sigh of satisfaction.

His enjoyment was short-lived. Directly behind him a narrow door opened into a dark ante-room. The tilting brought him against this door. Suddenly it flew open, and man and chair disappeared in the blackness, with the exception of two long legs waving wildly in the air.

The sudden overturn and the waving legs were too much even for the minister's dignity. He joined in the general laughter of the good deacons helped up the late astonished man.

JOAQUIN MILLER

Tells the Story of His Frontier Life on the Miami Reserve.

But my quiet, Quaker-like father did not seem destined to prosper in this world's wars, always loser or in anything at all, and, after vibrating between Cincinnati and the little village on the Ohio and Indiana line for three or four years, during which I and my two brothers were born, he set out, with his wife and three infant children, to push his way still further into the wilderness. He settled in a dense forest in what was then called the Miami Reserve, near the Mississinewa river, Marion, Grant county, Indiana. He alone and with his own hands, quite unused then to such toil, he with the help of my mother, built a little log cabin and cleared off a little patch of ground. The first recollection of my life is that of waking up suddenly one night, and looking out of the door upon wind-swept fire burning brush heaps, where my parents, side by side, were still toiling away, while the world rested. And from that time forth I search my memory in vain for one day of rest from hard manual toil for these two patient and uncomplaining people, outside of the Sabbath, which, of course, they always kept sacred. How snowy white was that cabin floor, hewn out of the forest by my father's hand; how clean and bright the blazing hearth; how cheery the few flowers that struggled up out of the strange wild soil about this lonely little cabin door.

But the fever and ague fell almost continually upon us all, and we did not get on. My poor parents gradually became discouraged, and a gloom and sadness settled down upon them forever, but I never heard one word of impatience or complaint. Never was one unkind word spoken in that cabin. I never knew that there was such a thing as tobacco, or whisky, or oaths, or cross words until years afterward, when we fell in with the great caravans crossing the plains; but I can see now that my parents were sadly, hopelessly discouraged. They never spoke of the past or their people at all; and, as I grew older, seeing tears in their eyes, as I one day asked them about these things, I never asked them any more and to this day I do not even know the Christian name of my father's father.

As the county slowly settled about us my father again taught school; but his three little boys he kept quite exclusive and all to himself. Sometimes, it is true, we were allowed to go with him to school, along the path through the thick woods; but it was a long walk and we did not go often. He taught us to read by our cabin fire and he read to us all the spare time he had. He never allowed us to mix with other children, and, indeed, I think we did not care for other company than ourselves. He put us to work, as soon as we were able, to pick up brush or pull weeds, and we never knew what it was to play. For my own part, I know I never had a top, or marble, or toy of any kind in my life, and never knew any of the games familiar to children.

My mother spun and wove our spare clothing out of flax which she grew in a corner of the little clearing, and I remember it seemed to me the grandest day of my life when the shoemaker came late one fall to measure me for my first pair of shoes.

But all this time my poor father seemed to grow more sad, silent, and thoughtful each year. By and by there was talk of the land coming into market, and, as we had no money yet to pay for it, he went out to work by the day at a mill which was being built over the river, three miles away. It was a lonesome time through the woods, and my father would have to set out before daylight and return from his work after dark. A day's work then meant the whole day. One night, as he neared home, the wolves chased him, and he had to take shelter in a tree. Mother heard his cries for help, and she took a hickory bark torch out and frightened away the wolves and brought him safely to the cabin. His wages were fifty cents a day, a small sum; but he counted it a great favor to get the job, for it enabled him finally to secure one hundred acres of land. Oh! how happy he was to have this his first home for his little family!

He Was The Fellow.

Sol. Miller is responsible for the following:

A good thing is related as having occurred in a barber shop in a certain town in this county recently, on the occasion of a too-too wedding.

"Well," said the barber to the usual crowd of loungers about such a place, "I guess the monkey show will come off this evening."

"What kind of a show is that?" inquired a stranger in the chair.

"Oh, there's to be a wedding in town," replied the barber.

"Who is to be married?"

"Well, some traveling man out west is going to marry old Mrs. Horusweggle's daughter. They would have been married a year ago if it had not been for the old woman."

"What was wrong with her?"

"Oh, she's a regular tom-cat with goggles on. She's too pious to blow her nose, and the fellow is an out-and-out infidel."

"And how have they fixed it, that the marriage is to take place now?"

"Well, he's worth about $40,000, and she hadn't enough religion to buck against that. But it's lucky for him that he lives a good way from the old woman."

The stranger was shaved, and as the barber was brushing his coat he inquired:

"Do you live in this neighborhood?"

"No," replied the stranger; "I'm from the west. I'm the fellow that is to be married this evening."

Wouldn't Run the Risk.

Burlington Hawkeye.

Rev. Dr. Henson, of the First Baptist church, Chicago, says that when he broke off the filthy habit of smoking he had "a sort of chimera bombinans in vacuo." Gee-o-roo-sa lem! Here, Malvoine, quick; take this 5 cents and run out and buy six imported Havana cigars; we haven't had a smoke since breakfast. By St. George, we wouldn't run the risk of having such a thing as that, not for the purest breath in all America! Shrine of the martyrs, how he must have suffered.

Matrimony and Finance.

Detroit Free Press.

"In our country," said the Englishman, as he leaned back in the chair, "before we marry we arrange to settle a certain sum upon th wife." "Yes, I know," replied the American, "but with us it is different. It is after we are married that we settle everything on the wife and arrange to beat our creditors." "Haw! I see. And how do the creditors take it?" "They never find anything to take."

Not Necessary to Study.

No, my son, don't think it necessary to study for the stage. Nobody does that nowadays. While you are wasting your time in study another man with nice fitting pantaloons, an obfurate facial development, and an energetic advance agent with a talent for puffing will rush forward and usurp the highest place in the profession.

Death Sentence In Kansas.

According to Kansas law, a murderer sentenced to death remains imprisoned for a year, and then, if the governor signs the death warrant, the felon is hanged. During the eleven years that the capital punishment law has been in force, nobody has been hanged except by lynchers.

THE TRAVELED TRAMP

Commences by Ringing the Changes on the "Zero Racket,"

Then Magnifies Our Country's Resources, and Talks of France's Future.

Brooklyn Eagle.

"This is pretty lively weather we are having," said a battered specimen of humanity, lounging into the political editor's room, and taking the easiest chair. "It is what we might call downright willing."

"Yes," said the editor, not looking up from his writing.

"Seems to me an iceberg must have floated down near our coast," said the battered party, pulling his coat together and turning up his collar. "I tell you this is the sort of weather to season a man for a trip to the North Pole, but it ain't nothin' to what we are having down in Boston."

"No," said the editor absently, as his pen flew over the paper before him.

"Now, in Boston, its pretty cold right along, but when you want to strike the every day below zero racket you have to drop in upon Canada. That's where you strike it lively for cold weather. Why, I've seen horses stuck fast in the street; every hoof frozen to the ground, and they just had to jump in and thaw them out before any travel could be done except on foot. I've seen the breath just frozen up solid right out from a fellow's mouth, and it was nothing for boiling water to freeze inside of two minutes. That's what I call weather what is weather."

"How can all this interest me?" asked the editor. "Do you take this for the signal service office?"

"No," said the battered party, "you must not complain of this sort of weather. Its simply summer compared with Alaska. Ever in Alaska?"

"No," said the editor, "and I don't see how it can interest you to know where I have or have not been."

"You should take a little trip through Alaska," said the battered visitor. "Great country. Lots of things in that country you never dreamed of, and cold! well, the weather down there would turn a red-hot bar of iron ice cold inside of three minutes. Tell you it takes a tough man to live in that country."

"Don't you think you have bored me long enough?" asked the editor, leaning back in his chair and glaring at the tramp.

"Now, Alaska is a part of our country we should take more interest in," said the tramp, settling lower in his chair and acting as though he had come to stay. "You wouldn't think it, but this country is just immense now that Alaska is added to the rest of our territory. Why, you draw a line somewhere about San Francisco and you cut the country square in half. Think for a moment what it means to live in such a country."

"How long do you propose to keep this very senseless conversation up?" asked the editor, bringing his hand down with a bang upon his desk. "Do you suppose I receive a salary for listening to every—"

"Think of our wealth," said the tramp. "Why, sir, we are the richest nation on the globe today. Almost twice as rich as Russia, and we can go a billion or so ahead of England herself. There is something for a true American to be crowing over. Ever been west? You can never properly appreciate this glorious country until you take a trip through the western states. What do you think of traveling a whole day through a single field of grain? That is the backbone of our nation, sir,—grain. Now I have an idea that you do not properly appreciate the land you live in. You do not appear to be interested in my conversation. Your eyes have an absent look about—"

"I'll give you just two minutes to get out of this building," shouted the editor, jumping to his feet.

"Then there are the territories," said the tramp, diving into his pocket and pulling out a stump of a cigar, which he proceeded to light. "There is Washington territory, for instance. Takes you thirty days to get there from here, going by steamer to—"

"You have two minutes left," cried the editor, picking up a heavy paper weight.

"That territory is just the best in all the land. Right on the Pacific coast, and a climate like Florida, only more to be depended upon for good, steady weather all the year round. Lots of enterprise down there, too. Think nothing of raising up a town of six or seven thousand souls. Speaking of souls, there is one thing I am sorry to see developing in our land, and that is the tendency to doubt religion. Now, I don't believe in crank preachers of the gospel, but we do not want to let go our faith altogether. That is sure to lead to the French revolution sort of thing. That was the turning point in the world's history though, that same revolution in France. Do you think the present republic in France will last? I do not. I'll bet you—"

"One minute," howled the editor, jumping back and raising the paper weight.

"I'll bet you a box of imported cigars that the party favoring the empire will be in power in France inside of—" Whiz! went the paper weight, but the tramp dodged it cleverly, and smiled sadly as he continued: "In France inside of six months. France is just ready to follow a bold man whenever he comes to—ever been to France? Don't you imagine that Paris is France any more than New York is the—" but here the patent double back action, however, caught the poor creature, and the editor was free.

The Missing Link.

Demorest's Monthly.

There is on exhibition at the Royal aquarium, Westminster, a little girl, seven years old, who it is claimed, is a specimen of the missing link between man and the anthropoid apes. This little waif came from Borneo, and belongs to the Lao country; she is called Krao. The body of this child is completely covered with a coating of dense black hair, a quarter of an inch long; the skin, such of it as is seen, is of a dark olive brown. Krao has many traits of the monkey, she has the full pouched cheeks, into which she stuffs her food, monkey fashion. Like the anthropoids her feet are prehensile, and the hands so flexible that they bend back over the wrists; the lips protude, so as to give her a chimpanzee look; there are some symptoms of an aborted tail in the elongation of the spinal column. Yet this monkey-like creature appears to be as intelligent as a European child of her own age. She is playful and gentle, and can articulate many English words which she uses intelligently. It seems there are numerous specimens of the tribe to which she belongs in Borneo. They are a hairy race, and when they reach adult life are of a low order of intelligence. Little Krao was a great favorite at the Aquarium, and the Darwinians, of course, claim that she and her kindred establish the probability of the theory that the human race did descend from some extinct species of anthropoid apes.

Recalls The Incident.

A bark that arrived in New York a few days ago reported that three of the sailors were washed overboard one day by a heavy sea, and the return swell swept them back onto the vessel again. That might have easily occurred. It recalls the incident of a girl who fell out of a fourth-story window, and, alighting on her patent india rubber bustle, was bounced back into the window uninjured.

Shabbiness of St. James.

The London Truth says of the recent embellishment of St. James's palace: "Anything more shabby and sawdry and utterly incongruous than the decorations and furnishings of the state rooms and the approaches thereto it would be difficult to imagine. The palace is really quite perfect in its own bad, poor way."

Mr. A. Kiefer—Dear Sir: My wife has for several years been a great sufferer from periodical attacks of Neuralgia in the head. Several of the most eminent physicians had been called upon to treat her, but they could only give temporary relief.

About two years ago she commenced using the Taxarine, and I am gratified to say, since then she has had no recurrence of those terrible pains. I attribute her restoration to health entirely to the use of Taxarine, and in conclusion would say to all who suffer that excruciating of all pains to give Taxarine a trial. Yours etc. J. Ship.

Jealousy.

Some poet has said that "All torments of the damned we find is only thee, Oh, eldousy, thou tyrant of the mind." This is grandly sweeping and magnificently inaccurate. Any sufferer from Indigestion knows to the contrary. Indigestion, the villian of the tragedy played upon the gastric juices of the stomach can, and does double discount the horrors of jealousy. ealousy is often an attendant upon the later, and when indigestion is removed, this jaundiced companion of a deranged liver flies. Taraxine is the best known remedy extant for impaired digestion, deranged liver, and diseases of the bowels and kidneys.

Mr. A. Kiefer: During the spring and summer my wife was a great sufferer from Indigestion and Dyspepsia, caused by a torpid liver. About a month ago she began using your Taxarine, and the first two doses gave her so much relief that she continued the use of it until two bottles had been taken, and I take pleasure in saying that her health is entirely restored.

Auburn, Cayuga Co., N. Y., Sept. 29, '82.
Rheumatic Syrup Co.:

I should have written you before in regard to the Rheumatic Syrup which you sent me, but have been waiting to see if the result was permanent. I can confidently say that it has had a very gratifying effect on my wife, relieving her of all pain within three days after she commenced taking it. I also gave away one bottle of the syrup to a friend, which had the same effect as on my wife. My wife has suffered great pain from rheumatism and kidney difficulty for years, and at times could hardly move. She has tried a great many medicines recommended to no purpose. It is the only remedy that gave her permanent relief. Yours, Robert S. Armstrong.

B. MINCER

NATIVE OF RUSSIA.

Scientific Optician,

(Twenty-One Year's Experience)

Who has been doing a large business at Adrian for a number of weeks, has testimonials from the best citizens.

Leave Orders at Sink's Hotel.

The delicate construction of the eye makes it necessary to use great care in selecting spectacles.

B. Mincer has made the Eye his special study, and in late years has paid his entire attention to the adaption of Spectacles to the same. Having a thorough experience in making and adapting spectacles to the eye, he is enabled to fit accurately in every case of abnormal vision, known as Presbyopia, Myopia, and Hypermetropia, as well as weak sight, requiring various tinted glasses. His improved Spectacles are of a perfect construction which assists and preserves the sight, rendering frequent changes quite unnecessary. They confer a brilliancy and distinctness of vision with an amount of ease and comfort not generally enjoyed by persons using spectacles. His lenses are ground on the most scientific principles, rendering them as clear as when in the full strength of youth. B. Mincer has some flattering testimonials of some of the leading citizens and oculists in the state, as to ability in fitting spectacles.

ADRIAN, Dec. 8, 1882.—To whom interested: Having for some time past used glasses to improve my sight, without satisfactorily gaining my object, I called on Mr. Mincer, optician, of Detroit, who readily adapted glasses to my eyes, with which I am so well pleased that I cheerfully speak in his favor. His method of examination, and its application in selecting glasses to fit the eye, can only be acquired by a knowledge of that useful organ to which must be added extensive experience. He has also adapted glasses to Mrs. Baker's eyes, with which she is well pleased. I recommend him to all who need glasses adapted to their wants. Poor glasses are an abomination.

V. A. BAKER, M.D.

ADRIAN, Dec. 21, 1882.—I have investigated the work of Mr. B. Mincer, optician. I have reason to believe that he understands his profession, and adjusts excellent glasses on scientific principles.

C. RYND, M.D.

ADRIAN, Dec. 15, 1882.—I take pleasure in recommending Mr. Mincer's glasses as being of a very superior quality, and his method of fitting them to the eyes as the very best.

S. A. FOWERS.

ADRIAN, Nov. 18, 1882.

I have used spectacles bought of Mr. B. Mincer for the past three months, and find them superior to any I have ever used, and can cheerfully recommend him to any one in need of good glasses, and the benefit of his experience in the science of optics to adjust proper lenses.

DANIEL TODD, M.D.

We clip the following testimonials from the Bryan Press relative to the merits of B. Mincer's glasses, who has sold a large number of spectacles in this vicinity, and in every instance has given entire satisfaction:

ANGOLA, Ind., Dec. 13, 1879.

This will recommend to you Mr. B. Mincer, who has made this place a point for sale of glasses; from his long practice in this particular business he has perfected himself so as to readily adapt glasses to any condition of the eyes, and I recommend him as a first-class, thorough optician.

I. S. B. WILLIAMS, M.D.

MORENCI, Dec. 2, 1881.

I take pleasure in recommending all persons who need glasses to aid the eye, to use the kind furnished by Mr. Mincer, who is capable of fitting the eye with the very best quality.

REV. J. CRABBS.

FAIRFIELD, Mich., Dec. 10, 1881.

Mr. B. Mincer, optician, of Detroit, has occasionally visited this county, and has fitted me with a pair of glasses, for myself; also my wife, with which we are much pleased, and would not part with them, and we take pleasure in recommending him to the public as a thorough optician and will fit any eye.

J. H. LAVERTY, M.D.

DELTA, Ohio, April 26, 1882.

I take pleasure in recommending all persons who are compelled to use glasses for weak eyes, or any other affected by age, or by the use of poor glasses, to try B. Mincer, optician. I have purchased of him a pair of glasses which are the best I ever used.

THE AMERICAN DRAMA

The Typical Silent Man of Action.

Joaquin Miller.

Excuse me if I view the iron plate set up for the immolation of pirate's heads. I venture to note some reflections about the coming play.

The carpenter, who now possesses the stage with his scenic effects is not the enemy of the playwright, as so many say, he is our auxiliary and the scene painter, he is our brother. We need and must have them both when the great play is written. Let us only do our work as well as they do theirs, and the public is ours.

As for this "great American play," some one of us will write it soon. And it will not only be the great play of America, but the great play of the age, the world. Far out yonder in the middle of America, beyond where the stormy sea of tradition from Europe rolls over us, I think we have the new, strong and sufficient motive to fashion it from.

The heroes of Homer shock their shields and recited the deeds of their fathers and grandfathers, even back to the gods. All Greek tragedy is in the same strain. St. Paul found the Greeks great talkers. Civilization in its march west around the world has been faithful to the Greek drama. Words! words! words! But out yonder in the far west this is all changed. The American pure and simple does not talk. He adds. And this grand, silent, massive American is to be the central figure for the American, the entirely new play. Whether this dignity of soul is born of the sublimity about him, the eternal peaks of snow above him, and the vast tranquility of the plain below him, I do not say. But I do say that this grand, unspeaking, acting man exists—a new man, a silent man in a noisy world.

And I should say he is peculiarly the growth of the land. For who ever saw an Indian whom wrong or pain or pity could move to words or tears? What man his ever heard an Indian baby cry? It took Gen. Grant twenty years to learn to talk after he left us in the far west. He used but two words in all the grand drama of the seizure of Vicksburg, "Unconditional surrender!" I admit that along the Atlantic seabank there seems to be a noisy brood; abroad, too, and in congress, for the old bible fool, known by his "multitude of words," is alike in all lands. And the fool has his uses, even in the drama. But this silent man, with his silent woman, at his side, this man of action and not of words, from middle America, as the central figure, is to mark and distinguish the new world play from the old.

I have had a glimpse of my silent man in Joe Jefferson! Only for a moment, however, for a drunken Knickerbocker is very remote from the hero I have in mind. But surely Jefferson has met and observed my silent man in the farthest west. Davy Crockett, however, in more than one sense, discovered this character almost entirely. Yet this may be accounted for by the fact that Mayo, the most studious of men, spent his youth on the Pacific, where he must have met and understood this silent man of deeds. There is a little scene at the well; the old mother comes to draw water. Davy drops everything, tenderly takes the bucket, draws, fills it, bears it away for his mother without letting the frail trembling old hand touch it, and hands it through the door after her. I do not remember that one word is spoken here. But I do know that more tears have been shed over that one silent and really insignificant scene than would fill that bucket. Oh, the tender manhood that is in it!

Another quaint bit from the west, which stands out like a star to me, is found in "My Partner." Gentle old Joe Saunders is going to divide the gold and go away, for there is bitter trouble. He digs up the gold from the hearth and pours it out on the table, where his silent partner sits with bowed face. He divides the gold with his knife. "Is that about right, pardner?"

"Yes, yes," answer the other, still looking away. And then Joe, and all the time without a word being spoken, pushes over more gold to his partner's heap. Seeing he is not observed, he cautiously slips over another nugget. Then he picks out at last the largest of his little heap, and unseen adds it to his successful rival's fortune. What a profanity words would be at such a time!

At West Point you read on a little monument that a portion of our army being ambushed in one of our Indian wars, every man stood his ground, fighting till only three survived, when help came. Grand! Immortal! But what moved me and seems most truly American is the fact, as told to me by a survivor, that not a word of command was given after the first order. Every officer silently drew his sword, became a common soldier, and so fought on to the end. There was no need of command; only the low prayer of the dying, the message to the loved ones at home, and all day the deadly fight went on. That is America, that is American character emptied of the froth of Fourth of July and foreign tradition. And that is the germ of the great American play.

Years ago I crossed over the Sierras into the new mines of Nevada, then a part of California. I found an old friend standing at the mouth of his mine, shouting out his commands in monosyllables down the shaft. New cities gleamed below; mines opened above; progress thundered through the land. "What are you doing here?" I cried. He took in the horizon under his hat, bit off the end of his cigar, looked at the new cities below, the tremendous mining engines all about the tunnels piercing the mountains above, but did not speak. "Why, what on earth are you all doing here in Nevada?" I again shouted. "World-hunting." And that was all that this silent man, now a United States senator, answered. It was enough. He made that word then and there, I think. He coined it as from his new silver.

The Pleasure of Forgetfulness.

Pittsburg Sunday Traveler.

The books we read and the stories we hear, if they could be forgotten as soon as read or heard, think of the inexhaustible riches of literature and conversation. Now, half that we read, and more than half which we hear is stale, flat and unprofitable, simply because of memory's ungrateful service. Memory has its bright side, but forgetfulness is a golden sphere; it is bright all over. Forgetfulness is pleasure, and pleasure is forgetfulness.

Mistook the Words.

New York Sun.

At a recent dinner at the Mansion house in London three foreign consuls were present, whom the lord mayor wished to honor by drinking their healths. He accordingly directed the toastmaster to announce the health of the present consuls. He, however, mistaking the words, gave out the following: "The lord mayor drinks the health of the three per cent consols."

BACON AND SHAKESPEARE.

A Contrast of their Characteristics and Literary Methods.

Richard Grant White in Atlantic Monthly.

And now we are face to face with what is, always, the great miracle in connexion with, as distinguished from evidence and external conditions, of this fact—that notion—the multiformity of Bacon's mind and of his style to fit each of the writer of the plays. Among all the men of that brilliant period who stood forth in the blaze of its light with sufficient distinction for us, at this time, to know only three of them, no two were so different as, unlike in their genius and moral traits and, in their literary habits, are Bacon and William Shakespeare. A study of them stamped the individuality of each ineffaceably upon his work. Both were thinkers of the highest order; both, what we somewhat loosely call philosophers; but how different their philosophy, how divergent their ways of thought, and how notably unlike the modes of expression! Bacon, a cautious observer and investigator, ever looking at men and things through the dry light of cool reason. Shakespeare, glowing with instant inspiration, seeing by intuition the thing before him, outside and inside, body and spirit, as it was, yet moulding it as it was to his immediate need—finding in it merely an occasion of present thought, and regardless of it, except as a stimulus to his fancy and his imagination; Bacon, a logician; Shakespeare, one who set logic at naught, and soared upon wings, compared with which syllogisms are crutches! Bacon, who sought, in the phrase of Saul of Tarsus—that Shakespeare of charity—to prove all things, and to hold fast that which is good; Shakespeare, one who, like Saul, loosed upon the world winged phrases, but who reeked not his own rede, proved nothing, and held fast both to good and evil, delighting in his Falstaff as much as he delighted in his Imogen; Bacon, in his writing, the most self-asserting of men; Shakespeare, one who, when he wrote, did not seem to have a self; Bacon, the most cautious and pains-taking, the most consistent and exact, of writers; Shakespeare, the most heedless, the most inconsistent, the most inexact, of all writers who have risen to fame. Bacon, sweet sometimes, sound always, but dry, stiff, and formal; Shakespeare, unsavory sometimes, but oftenest breathing perfume from Paradise, grand, large, free, flowing, flexible, unconscious, and incapable of formality; Bacon, precise and reserved in expression; Shakespeare, a player and quibbler with words, and swept away by his own verbal conceits into intellectual paradox, and almost into moral obliquity; Bacon without humor; Shakespeare's smiling lips the mouthpiece of humor for all human kind. Bacon, looking at the world before him and at the teaching of past ages with a single eye to his theories and his individual purposes; Shakespeare finding in the wisdom and the folly, the woes and the pleasures, of the past and the present only the means of giving pleasure to others and getting money for himself, and rising to his height as a poet and a moral teacher only by his sensitive intellectual sympathy with all the needs and joys and sorrows of humanity; Bacon, shrinking from a generalization even in morals; Shakespeare, ever moralizing, and dealing even with individual men and particular things in their general relations; both worldly-wise, both men of the world, and both these master intellects of the Christian era were worldly-men in the thorough Bunyan sense of the term; but the one using his knowledge of men and things critically in philosophy and in affairs; the other, his synthetically, as a creative artist. Bacon, a highly trained mind, and showing his training at every step of his cautious, steady march; Shakespeare, wholly untrained, and showing his want of training even in the highest reach of his soaring flight; Bacon, utterly without the poetic faculty even in a secondary degree, as is most apparent when he desires to show the contrary; Shakespeare, rising with unconscious effort to the highest heaven of poetry ever reached by the human mind. To suppose that one of these men did his own work and also the work of the other is to assume two miracles for the sake of proving one absurdity.

Chinese Actors and Theatres.

New York Journal.

A reporter asked the Mongolian Booth if he had come to New York to start a Chinese theatre, as was currently reported here among theatrical managers.

"I shall see what we may do," he replied in English spoken with a slight Coreun accent. "New York ought to have a Chinese theatre. It is large enough to support one. There are 7,000 Chinamen in the city and Americans might come to our plays with a Chinese libretto. I would get my stock company from San Francisco and perhaps send for a leading man to China. A very respectable orchestra could be obtained from the Mott street brass band. We would play light Chinese comedy."

"How long are Chinese plays?"

"Ours are the shortest in the world. The longest one I ever saw lasted twenty-five minutes. At every performance a Chinese theatre company gives a dozen or fifteen plays. They are entirely independent of, and different from each other. The programmes are unusually long, being somewhat like those of your old Bowery theatre. It is this fact that has given foreigners an idea that Chinese plays run several months."

"Does it require much capital to run a Chinese theatre?"

"A great deal. The Chinese in New York could demand a first-class company. Good actors in Shanghai, Pekin or Canton get two hundred and fifty dollars a week. The costumes of the players are of the most elaborate and expensive kind. The wardrobe of the theatre at Canton cost $[illegible]. A great Chinese star will have $[illegible] worth of stage clothes and gems. They do not wear paste jewels in plays as here, but real precious stones and ornaments of the finest gold. When an actor plays an emperor or a princess he dresses up to the part, though it costs him nearly a fortune. The best theatre in China is that of Canton. It will hold about fifteen thousand people.

"Who is the greatest actor now in China?"

"Ah Poo Choo is the John McCullough of China. Ah Tack is the Joe Jefferson. The excellences demanded of players there are higher than here. There are no women on the stage in that country. A great actor in China must be a tragedian, a comedian and a female impersonator. The Chinese player is prepared for his profession by a four years' course of study at a school of dramatic art at Canton. Strolling companies travel on canal boats. Turkey actors make about $2.50 a week, and get engagements during the Festival of the Dragon."

"Will your theatre differ from others in the city?"

"The orchestra will be back of the stage which will be a march on those theatres which have put it under the stage. It will consist of two or three drums, four or five gongs, two stringed fiddles, brass pans and Chinese banjoes. Matinees will begin at 11 o'clock and end at 1:30. Evening performances will begin at 8 o'clock and last until half after eleven. The price of admission will be from fifteen cents to $1. The audience may eat, drink and smoke during the play. A fault of the Union Square theatre is that the audience cannot have a lunch in the seats while the drama is playing."

New York Letter.

It is reported that a Chinese tragedian, who has been employed at San Francisco at a salary that most "leading gentlemen" dare aspire to, is on his way to New York to open a new theatre. One Chinaman remarked of the new actor: "Him makee McCully takee a back seatee belly quickee, you bet. Me see McCully," continued the merchant, "him no good; him yelled muchee, and say takee him hangee him up to dry on muchee nearee tree, cutee him throat; that fellee Roman cutthroatee." The tea merchant speaking was one Lung Lop, who claims to speak English perfectly, and will not speak his native tongue.

Grave Robbers.

Of all classes of people the professional grave robbers are the most despised. He robs us of our dear friends for a few dollars. How different is this new grave robber, Dr. Bigelow's Positive Cure, which robs graves of thousands of consumptives. This unequalled remedy for coughs, colds and consumption, whooping cough, croup and all throat and lung diseases, subdues and conquers these troubles speedily, safely and thoroughly. Trial bottles free, of Baker & Hall.

People swear because they know their words are worthless.

A Public Duty.

We are not in the habit of puffing any sort of patent medicines in our columns for the business of a newspaper is to let people know what is going on in the world and not to lend aid to what may be an imposition. But we happen to know Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., and can personally testify to the excellence of the medicine which the doctor calls "Favorite Remedy." For diseases of the blood, kidneys, and bowels it has no equal. We would not be without it for five times the dollar that it costs.—Daily Times.

Perseverance is the bridge by which difficulty is overcome.

Is Fun Better than Physic?

Fun is excellent; a hearty laugh is known the whole world over to be a health promoter; but fun does not fill the bill when a man needs physic, on the other hand people take too much physic. They would be more healthy, live longer and enjoy life thoroughly if they used Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic, which cures all blood disorders, indigestion, kidney and liver troubles, removes pimples, and is a perfect tonic. Can be taken by the most delicate. Only 50c a bottle, of Baker & Hall.

Never open the door to a little vice, lest a great one come in.

Six to Fifteen.

"Having been an invalid for a number of years, I have received more benefit during the last six months from the use of your "Favorite Remedy" than from the preceding fifteen years treatment from the best physicians of New York and surrounding country." Thus writes Mrs. Marion Reeve, in a letter dated at Cornwall, N. Y., to Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y. Is any extended comment needed on this. $1 a bottle. All druggists sell it.

Have no fear of any of these diseases if you use Hop Bitters, as they will prevent and cure the worst cases, even when you have been made worse by some great puffed up pretended cure.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is the pioneer of cheap journalism in the West. It was founded Dec. 20, 1876, as an evening paper with editions at noon, 3 and 5 o'clock. A complete newspaper,—complete in the one essential feature of American journalism, i. e., presenting all the news,—sold on the street at any price less than the conventional nickel, was an innovation in western journalism, and, like all new enterprises, this "cheap paper" had to contend with long established custom and even prejudice before securing the recognition it sought and deserved. At the end of the first year, 1877, it had achieved a daily sale ranging from 8,000 to 16,000 copies. From this time forward its progress was beyond all precedent in American journalism. In 1877 its average daily circulation was 20,037 copies; in 1878, 48,514 copies; in 1879, 46,104 copies; in 1880, 54,801 copies. On the morning of March 21, 1881, the CHICAGO MORNING NEWS made its first appearance. In September following, the sixth month of its publication, its circulation amounted to 490,619 copies, or a daily average of 18,946 copies,—a circulation never before attained by any daily paper in the United States, within a corresponding time.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS, therefore, as now published, consists of MORNING, NOON, and EVENING ISSUES, known respectively as the MORNING NEWS, NOON NEWS, and EVENING NEWS. The average combined circulation of the three issues of the DAILY NEWS now exceeds 90,000 copies each day. To appreciate the exceptional extent of this vast circulation it is only necessary to state that it is over three times the circulation of any other daily paper in Chicago or the West, while its circulation in the city of Chicago is GREATER than ALL other Chicago daily papers COMBINED. Being an independent paper the organ of no party, sect, or class, it is the one universally read Chicago paper. The subscription price of the DAILY NEWS, either MORNING or EVENING issue, is $6.00 per year, or $3.00 for four months, postage included.

On July 2, 1878, the DAILY NEWS purchased the CHICAGO EVENING POST, consolidated its daily issue with the DAILY NEWS, and continued its weekly issue under the name of the CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS. The WEEKLY NEWS under its present name and management is therefore less than five years old, though as a consecutive weekly publication it is now in its twentieth year. The CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS takes a corresponding field among weekly newspapers to that occupied by the DAILY NEWS among dailies. It gives the news of the world in condensed yet complete form. Its Chicago market quotations are especially complete and trustworthy. That the CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS has been correct in its judgment of the requirements of a large class of readers of the weekly press is best evidenced by the extent of its circulation, which aggregated in the month immediately preceding the date of this writing, 202,053 copies, or a weekly average of 50,513 copies. The subscription price of the WEEKLY NEWS is but SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS per year, postage included.

The phenomenal success of the CHICAGO NEWS in both its DAILY and WEEKLY ISSUES has been achieved by observing that fundamental principle of offering the best article of its kind in the market at the lowest cost to the purchaser. The CHICAGO NEWS is cheap only in price. The character of its news service is unsurpassed. It is a member of the Western Associated Press, and in addition to the unrivalled news service furnished by this Association it enjoys the exceptional advantage of its own special telegraphic wire from Chicago to Washington and New York on the East, and to Milwaukee and St. Paul on the North. Giving all the news through reportorial and telegraphic facilities unsurpassed by those of any other Chicago paper, it commends itself to all classes in the community, to rich and poor alike, in that it offers an absolutely complete record of the news of the day in concise form, without the verbiage and amplification which render so many metropolitan journals a weariness to the flesh," while its price brings it within the reach of all classes. It is a paper for the times.

$150,000 GIVEN AWAY!

THE PRACTICAL FARMER, OF PHILADELPHIA, from an intimate acquaintance with its readers, has found there is a general desire to possess Farms and Homes in the West. Now, in order to give each of our Subscribers an opportunity to obtain an Improved Farm, a well-known, reliable real estate man has carefully selected for us 100 FARMS, to be offered as Premiums to our paper. We also offer, in connection with the Farm property, as Premiums, fine Steel-Plate Engravings—superb reproductions of the works of the greatest masters. These are alone worth the price of the paper; and when we give, in addition, the opportunity to obtain an Improved Farm, we are making The Most Splendid Offer Yet! Every Subscriber will receive a Premium. The Practical Farmer was founded by Paschall Morris in 1855, and is one of the oldest Agricultural, Literary and Family Journals published. Its character and reputation are of the highest, and Subscribers rarely drop from our lists. It has 16 pages, published weekly, at $2.00 per annum. We want 75,000 new Subscribers in two months, and offer as Premiums the Steel-Plate Engravings and 100 GOOD IMPROVED FARMS Located in the States of Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and Dakota, aggregating 16,630 ACRES AND WORTH $140,000.

These Farms are all in good condition, and are in size from 80 to 960 acres, and worth from $600 to $10,000 each. The Farms will be conveyed by Warranty Deed, and a clear and perfect Title, shown from the United States down. They are all ready to occupy, and will be productive homes from the start. As high as 30 BUSHELS OF WHEAT per acre was harvested from some of these Farms last year. All of these lands are just as good and will produce as much under like circumstances. The tenancies are such that possession can be given at once. How you may obtain one of the Farms. Subscribe for the "PRACTICAL FARMER." Immediately upon receiving the Subscription price—$2.00, a receipt and the current number of the Farmer will be mailed to the sender, his name entered upon our subscription list, and the paper continued for one year. As soon as we have 10,000 new Subscribers registered on our books, or in ten days from date, we will award to each of them a premium, aggregating in value $20,000, in such a manner that each subscriber will have a fair and equal opportunity to obtain one of the Farms and Engravings. In the same way the second and following series of 10,000 Subscribers will receive their Premiums until the entire $150,000 worth of property is given away. These Farms and Engravings are intended as premiums to our Subscribers. The distribution of these is entirely gratuitous upon our part, and is intended by us as a means of dividing with our subscribers the profits of the year. The name and address of those securing the valuable Premiums will be published in the PRACTICAL FARMER.

Having made up our mind to secure, at any cost, the largest circulation of any Agricultural Paper in the World, we have resolved to forego all profits and give our Subscribers the Farms and Engravings for the benefit derived from the present and future large circulation. A sample Paper, containing description of the Engravings and of the 100 Farms, with a description of the improvements, dimensions of houses, etc., will be sent free.

WHO WILL RECEIVE THE $10,000 FARM?

CLUB RATES. In order that your name and your friends names may be among the first series of 10,000 subscribers to whom the first $20,000 worth of property will be awarded, subscribe at once and get up clubs in your neighborhood immediately. Go to work at once. Show the paper containing the list of Farms and description of improvements. If you will get 10 Subscribers and send $20, we will give the getter-up of the Club a subscription for himself FREE, which will give him equal right with other subscribers to obtain one of the Farms. For 20 subscribers and $40 we will give two extra subscriptions; for 25 subscribers and $50, three extra subscriptions; for 30 subscribers, four extra subscriptions; for 35 subscribers and $70, five extra subscriptions; for 40 subscribers and $80, six extra subscriptions; for 45 subscribers seven extra subscriptions; and for 50 subscribers and $100, we will give eight extra subscriptions. The extra subscriptions can be sent to any one to whom the getter-up of the Club desires. Each of whom will have an equal opportunity to obtain one of the Farms. By this means you may get the 960 acre Farm. Let every reader of this advertisement send at least one name with his own, and we will get the 75,000 subscribers and will distribute the $150,000 worth of property at once! Remember you may get a Farm worth $3,000 or $10,000, free of every encumbrance.

IMPORTANT!—As a matter of security to our Subscribers the Deeds and Abstracts of Title to all the Farms have been deposited with the Union Trust Company of Philadelphia, Pa.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT TECUMSEH, MICH., IS AN, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TECUMSEH, MICH., APR. 5, 1883.

The almanacs all call it spring, but the robins tell a different story.

The election in Tecumseh last Monday was a remarkably quiet one.

The "independent scratcher" is becoming more numerous with every election.

The entire Union state ticket was chosen Monday by majorities ranging from 3000 to 8000.

The lying in the star-route trial is only excelled by that of the Canadian weather prophets.

Chicago was buried beneath a Democratic avalanche Monday, Mayor Harrison being re-elected by a majority of over ten thousand.

Politics seem to be turning "t'other end to." For the first time in several years the Democratic state ticket received a majority in Tecumseh.

The Jackson Patriot says: Having assisted at the birth of the Republican party in this State, it is mete and proper that Gov. Blair should officiate as high priest at its funeral obsequies.

A St. Louis paper wickedly observes: Ohio has done so much for the people at large by furnishing material to plug up official holes with that there is a general willingness to refrain from draining her any more.

The annual spring difficulty has passed and the country is again saved. The "outs" will resume their customary avocations, the "ins will breathe easier, and all good citizens will settle down and be satisfied.

Ex-Mayor Oakey Hall, of New York, has purchased the Truth newspaper for $100,000 and taken possession of the property. He is a man of versatility and accomplishments and will undoubtedly make the paper a success.

"Never mind the fall. That soul is only two hours old, and it's a little weak yet," were the words with which a salvation army officer at Adrian excused the mis-step of a convert who recently failed to retire from the stage in a perpendicular position.

The N. Y. Sun gives the following as the best Democratic platform for 1884:

1—A tariff for revenue only.

2—The tariff, the only source of revenue.

The Sun is level headed this time as usual.

Vanderbilt's fancy ball is said to have cost $50,000. That is a good deal of money to fool away for music and lights and evergreens and ice cream. But then, Vanderbilt can afford it. In proportion to his financial ability to pay the bills, it was a very modest ball.

The spring elections in Ohio were rather mixed. Taken altogether the Democrats have the advantage. They carry the entire city ticket in Cleveland and elect a mayor by 3000 majority. Cincinnati also elects a Democratic mayor and a majority of the city ticket.

The result of the election in this state is somewhat of a surprise. It shows that the Union of the opposition forces last fall was a cordial and healthy one, and can be relied upon hereafter. The Republican leaders of Michigan may as well understand that henceforth they will have to meet a united opposition.

So far, 1883 has been very prolific of disasters, and startling events of different kinds, fearful floods and calamitous flames have broken all bounds and rioted in the destruction of property and human life. While the crime calendar throughout the world has swelled its proportions to frightful dimensions in the past three months.

The Reading Telephone says, that a kerosene lamp exploded in that town a few evenings ago. This is the first instance of the kind we have heard of in some time, and the question naturally arises, was the oil up to the required standard? The people of the state put up with an oil of poor illuminating property for the supposed consideration of safety.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, March 31st, 1883.

The Vanderbilt ball is an event of the past, but what a subject for gossip it has been for those who were there and those who were absent.—That it was a success cannot be said. In fact, how could such barefaced worship of the golden calf be an occasion for entertaining people. Now to begin at the beginning. The floral decorations and the other ornamentations were not nearly so elaborate as represented in the papers, and the fabulous figures which were mentioned as having been expended may be safely discounted sixty per cent, and still leave a margin. Of the twelve hundred invited guests about five hundred did not come. Our real "society" declined to be present to help swell the Vanderbilt pride. Of those that did come, a great many ladies dressed very plainly. It seems that a number of them had got artists to design costumes for them. These designs however were indiscreetly communicated by the modistes to other ladies, and thus in several instances they were copied. The originators thereupon declined to appear in their selected costumes and put on some simple makeshift. But the worst disappointment of all was that about one o'clock the champagne gave out. Most of the gentlemen were unable to get anything to eat and therefore tried to drown their sorrow with the cup that cheereth. When the calamity occurred the hat was quietly passed around and some one then went to a drug store not far off, and purchased his entire stock of Appolinaris water. So much for this much talked about social event.

The weather has been extremely raw and changeable during the past week. As the result the mortality from lung and bronchial diseases is very heavy. Last week there were 166 fatal cases, the heaviest mortality for thirteen years for the corresponding weeks. This week the indications are that this number will be largely increased. What has saved us thus far is the humidity of the atmosphere which has been so great as to make our climate closely resemble that of Colorado, which is now a favorite resort for those suffering from affections of the respiratory organs. Yet in spite of this, physicians with any sort of clientage are kept almost constantly on the go. Business too languishes under this weather. When ladies find comfort beneath fur-lined circulars and seal skin coats they are not going to imperil their health by changing them for the light Spring fabrics.—The weather may be delightful enough for an hour or two after noon, but chances are five to one every time that a raw breeze will spring up and cut through one's clothes like a knife, and then there is pneumonia in less than no time.

The nine days wonder, the shooting of Haverstick, the betrayer of Mrs. Uhler, by her brother his ended. Conkling has been discharged by Police Justice Smith and gone back to Nevada with his sister. The justice rightly held that the shooting was done in self defence. And now the papers that had been shrieking that the young man had done well when he tried to rescue the family honor, denounce Justice Smith for doing the common sense act. Such is consistency. When Haverstick was dead, everybody who knew him said, "It is a good thing that we are rid of him."—Now that he has left what little property remained after his extravagant life to his mother, these same weathercocks say "Well, he was not such a bad fellow after all. He was treated rather too harshly," but no one says anything about the wretched woman who was the cause of it all.

I don't know whether the sparrows have emigrated from Massachusetts since they were outlawed there, but at all events in no previous Spring do I remember seeing so many of them as this year. The little fellows in certain portions of the city are as thick as flies, and they have appetites like steerage passengers after a voyage across the Atlantic. A week ago we feed a delegation of them with crumbs from a window of our house. Since then they are steady pensioners appearing regularly every morning, and even fighting the cat who came to the front in the hope of getting a game lunch. At the city hall they have invested a spare room on the top floor and formed an encampment, and at the Toombs Prison they are so numerous that they organize regular attacks on Warden Finn's pet pigeons, and the pigeons get the worst of it.—They literally own City Hall Park, and get along famously with the bootblacks and gamins that abound there. Almost every morning two or three pairs of gentlemen sparrows have a pitched battle on the lawn on the Broadway side of the Hall. A crowd gathers at once, but it is hard to say whether they are more interested in the tiny gladiators than the members of their own families who perched upon the branches of the trees look on like connoisseurs, and occasionally turn round to chatter as if they were wagering seeds on the result. It struck me that perhaps Darwin got his idea of evolution from a scene like this.

Rev. Daniel W. Lathrop died in Jackson last week, aged 85. He was the first pastor of the presbyterian church at Elyria, Ohio, the pastorate continuing from 1823 to 1849, when failing health obliged him to relinquish the ministry. He had lived with his son George H. in Jackson seven years.

Custer, Mason county, has just shipped its first car load of clothes pins.—Aldrich & Brayman are turning out 45,000 pins a day, each of which travels 150 feet and through over $3,000 worth of machinery in the process of making. The boy who feeds the machine pokes them in at the rate of 100 a minute, and his stipulation is one-fifteenth of a cent a dozen. The price paid for packing is four and a half cents per box. When packed, each pin is worth one-twelfth of a cent.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE.

Wonderful Surgical Operation—Removal of Urinary Stones from the Bladder Successful.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell, of Saugerties, N. Y., has been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they call Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife, and then gave his great Blood Specific, "Favorite Remedy," to prevent their reformation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation of the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from the constitutions of women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Dennedy, Roundout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery.

HERE AT LAST.

After Long and Weary Waiting Relief is Brought to Those who Need it.

"Well, Pat," said an Orange county Physician to a complaining Irish patient some years ago, "for that pain in your chest you had better go home and put on a mustard plaster. I can't think this minute of anything better. And by the way," added the doctor, turning to a friend, "I wish somebody would invent a real good plaster—something actually healthful for such cases as Pat's. Maybe they will sometime, when its too late for me to use it."

When BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER was placed on the market about ten years ago the doctor's hope became a fact. Because of the rare medicinal virtues inherent in it, its rapid action and sure results, the Capcine is fast displacing the slow-acting plasters of former days, for all affections to which a plaster is ever applicable. Price 25 cents. In the middle of the genuine is cut the word CAPCINE.

COMPOUND OXYGEN NOT A DRUG

A NEW TREATMENT.

For Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic and Nervous Disorders.

A CARD.

We the undersigned, having received great and permanent benefit from the use of "COMPOUND OXYGEN," prepared and administered by DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, of Philadelphia, and being satisfied that it is a new discovery in medical science, and all that is claimed for it, consider it a duty which we owe to the many thousands who are suffering from chronic and so-called "incurable" diseases to do all that we can to make its virtues known, and to inspire the public with confidence.

We have personal knowledge of Drs. Starkey & Palen. They are educated, intelligent and conscientious physicians, who will not, we are sure, make any statement which they do not know or believe to be true, nor publish any testimonials or reports of cases which are not genuine.

BUTLER, March 10, 1882.

GENTS—I take this opportunity to express my gratitude for what your Rheumatic Syrup has done for me. After suffering over one year with the rheumatism in my shoulders, so I could hardly get my coat on without help, a friend induced me to try one bottle of Rheumatic Syrup. After taking it I could see such a decided change that I continued its use a short time and it cured me.

No fee at the door, but all who attend will be expected to give this amount, as the proceeds will go to purchase a new carpet for the parlor.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

"Cleanliness is indeed next to Godliness."—Wesley.

Tuesday, business called us to our neighboring city of Adrian, and after doing a little in the line of business, our attention was called to a long banner strung out on North Main st., on which was painted "Grand Salvation Army of America." We concluded to spend a little time seeing the sights of the city and commence then and there with the "salvation army." We ascended a long flight of very dirty narrow stairs turned twice to the left, once to the right and brought up in front of a door at the end of a long, dark, narrow hall, together with several other people who seemed to be headed for the same place we were. Without a light it was hard to tell what kind of people they were, but one thing we noticed was that each one carried a little pail or basket, and that the smell in that place was anything but heavenly. After a few minutes reflection a young man wearing a uniform came and let us in, and we were ushered into a room perhaps 40 feet square, which contained a few seats and quite a number of 2 inch pine planks, which served as a resting place for the sinners who would rather run slivers into their pants behind, than shingle nails in front. The room also contained a stove surrounded by a sand box, which served the double purpose of spit box and zinc, a few banners and notions, and last but not least, a cupboard built under one corner of the dilapitated old gallery, into which "Johnny," the young man in charge, speedily put all the little pails and baskets brought in by the people. Now, "Johnny" was a bright young boy about 19; to be sure his neck and wrists were plainly marked with a high tide mark of some days standing; he was also a little careless about the use of his handkerchief, which fact gave his right coat sleeve more the appearance of a traveling spittoon than of a covering naturally intended for the arm; and as the young man borrowed a match of us to start the fire, he informed us firmly but gently that the afternoon's meeting was only intended for christians, and that as the fire was now started and the crowd was beginning to arrive, we had better retire. The HERALD man was first mad, then abashed, and for a long time we could not decipher how he found out the fact that we were not a christian, till we remembered having stumbled on the 98th stair coming up, and at that time could not give our oath that we had not used a word stronger than gosh, but something had to be done, we wanted to stay and issuing ten cents, purchased a songster, and in less than a minute was a full fledged christian, occupying a prominent seat in the hollow square, and praying that operations might soon commence, or that the man who had been eating onions might be removed to the other side of the building.

After a few moments the other charter members of the army arrived, viz: the Mayor, a man of prepossessing appearance,—with a large nose and long beard; his Captain, a man who had evidently seen much war, as he had but one eye and limped in both coat tails, in fact, he reminded us of the lean Marks in the last Tom's Cabin party or of Dick Deadeye in Pinafore, (perhaps we could give a better comparison had we ever seen more than these shows in our own town,) and last the two Corporals, one a woman who would weigh about 200 lbs., Tecumseh weight, and who had a voice like a lion, and the other a woman who would weigh about 200 lbs. Adrian weight, and resembled Mrs. Tom Thumb in many particulars. In less than a minute after the party arrived and "Johnny" had swallowed the last mouthful of biscuit the performance commenced, and now all we can do is to confess our inability to describe on paper what followed. As the Mayor raised his hands and gave the signal, the lameness all went from Deadeye's coat tails, Johny flew around like a deacon in a "Gin Mill," Mrs. Tom Thumb seemed to grow larger than a Giant, and when old heavy weight opened her mouth, we vanished; have no idea how we got out of the place nor by what road, but luck was on our side and as we brought up on the sidewalk with hat in one hand and songster in the other, it was a great pleasure to find ourselves in a crowd of Rynd men from the fourth ward who gave us any amount of consolation. It is needless to say that we did not attend the evening service.

This account may seem a little overdrawn to persons who have never visited these people who call themselves the Salvation Army, but the account cannot but have a strong semblance of truth to any one who has witnessed their performances. We would wish to be the last to ridicule anything which could possibly tend to elevate mankind, no matter how ignorant or lowly was the project, but in looking into the ways of this organization no one can see anything intended to do mankind any good. The whole plan seems to be founded in filth and ignorance. It is sustained simply by the excitement of a class of people who could not influence themselves, let alone guiding the steps of fellow mortals. Good christianity cannot exist amongst filth: our Maker has furnished for us plenty of pure water, with which all may become clean, and we not only claim, that "cleanliness is indeed next to Godliness," but also that without it christian Godliness cannot exist.

RAILROAD NOTES.

Two factions of Marshall citizens are quarreling over the location of the new M. & O. depot.

The line through the village of Homer has not been as yet decided upon.

Asst. Eng. Baird and his gang of surveyors ran a new line last week from Britton to Dundee, striking the T. & A. A. road about sixty rods north of the Dundee depot. No decision has been made yet as to whether the road will be built to Dundee or directly from Britton to Toledo.

Thirteen gangs of graders are at work on the Addison section of eighteen miles.

The big bridge over the Raisin, east of this village, is rapidly approaching completion. It vill be ready for the ties in a few days

The road is ironed from Allegan to a point eight miles east of Monteith.

The HERALD is very welcome to us and we would not do without it for many times its cost. It has seemed to me an exceptionaly well conducted paper during the last few years, but we prize it especially for the news it brings us from our old home. My wife was a Tecumseh girl, and Macon Center, as it is now called, is where I spent my early years. We came here last summer, as you may know, from Detroit, are pleasantly situated and like our new home, but yet must say that Detroit as a city and Michigan as a state hold the uppermost place in our esteem, as compared with St. Paul and Minnesota. Best wishes for success of HERALD. J. H. DARLING.

A few weeks since a gentleman came to Paw Paw, calling himself a United States detective, an ex-United States marshal, etc. He wooed and won one of Paw Paw's fairest daughters. After living a happy married life for forty-eight hours, he packed his satchel, folded his tent, and silently stole away to distant climes. The wife has returned to her ma, and the next time she marries she will probably learn, at least, the pedigree of her husband.

Clinton and Ridgeway flopped on Supervisor. Both towns elected a Republican last Monday.

"Hail auspicious day! The Homer Index office has invested in a clean towel. We still wipe on our exchanges."—Tekonsha News. Now the Register office has a towel (fact) which has done good service for the last decade. Contrary to the general rule of inability, it has not grown gray by our service, but black, and as it is quite capable of supporting itself, unaided, we are entertaining serious thoughts of granting it an honorable discharge from further active duty, and shall allow it to retire to the superannuated list.—Union City Register. The Journal office also can boast of a new towel. We did think we could get along with our old one for a year longer, but since a couple of our boys died from the effects of hog cholera by wiping on it, we concluded we would "blow in" ten cents on a new one. Our old one we have stood up in a dark and secluded corner and is numbered as one of the past.—Cronson Journal.

Well, if you fellows can afford clean and new towels, we shall have to invest, for we are bound not to be behind the times.

Lowell, Mass., Mail in speaking of Duprez & Benedict's Minstrels which are to be at the Opera House on Tuesday evening next says: In fact, every feature on the programme was well performed, and we think the general verdict of the audience would be that Mr. Duprez' claim that he has "the strongest company he has ever managed," is not an extravagant one.

Col. Sumner Spafford and wife of Des Moines, Iowa, have arrived in town and will remain here a few weeks.

Geo. J. Keyser has gone to Detroit to buy goods.

SPECIAL TO ALL.

Persons having farms to sell or any property to dispose of, or those who wish to purchase real estate should call at the HERALD office. We have a number of good bargains. We also have a number of calls for places to rent. We can rent or sell places at short notice and upon reasonable rates.

—To owners of Dowagiac Harrows: We have made arrangements to replace, free of charge, all teeth broken on harrows purchased from E. V. DePuy last year, if teeth are returned at once. Slayton & Son.

—Farmers should examine the McCormick Harvester and Binder for 1883 before placing their order.

E. V. DePuy, Agent.

Also the Michigan Manufacturing Co.'s Platform Wagons and Buggies.

—Wheat! Wheat!! Slayton & Son want to buy your good red wheat at the top price. Call on them.

—Special pains taken in filling and preserving the natural teeth at Dr. B. F. Snyder's Dental Rooms.

—The Kalamazoo spring tooth harrow and the Dowagiac wheel harrow in three sections at Slayton & Son's.

TECUMSEH, Mich., March 25, '83.

I have been troubled with a hard cough for many years, and have found nothing to help me until I tried Dr. Bigelow's positive cure, which has completely cured me.

WELCOME SHERMAN.

A Common-sense Remedy.

SALICYLICA.

No More Rheumatism, Gout or Neuralgia.

Immediate Relief Warranted. Permanent Cure Guaranteed.

This great remedy is the most that never known to fail in a single case, acute or chronic. Refer to all prominent physicians and druggists in the United States.

SECRET

The only specific for the poisonous uric acid which exists in the blood in Rheumatic and Gouty patients.

SALICYLICA is known as a common-sense remedy, because it strikes directly at the cause of Rheumatism, Gout, and Neuralgia, while so many so-called specifics and antidotes only treat locally the effects.

If the back, loins, and joints are treated by outward applications, such as rubbing with oils, ointments, liniments and soothing lotions will not eradicate these diseases which are the result of the poisoning of the blood with Uric Acid.

SALICYLICA works with marvelous effect on this acid and so relieves the disorder. It is now exclusively used by all celebrated physicians of America and Europe. Highest Medical Academy of Paris reports 95 per cent. cures in three days.

REMEMBER

that SALICYLICA is a certain cure for the rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia. The most intense pains are subdued almost instantly.

A LYCEUM LECTURE.

How Walnutville Received Mrs. Brown's Lecture on the Parthenon.

Harper's Magazine.

Reader, didst ever deliver a lecture at a country lyceum? If so, read the following. It is good. "We have been there."

Mrs. Brown, having a lecture upon the Parthenon, was invited to deliver it before the lyceum of Walnutville. Knowing of Walnutville only that it was twelve miles from a railroad, Mrs. Brown suggested a more popular subject. No, Walnutville wanted the Parthenon. At the station named in the letter of direction Mrs. Brown saw a stage, and soon its driver said:

"Be you the lecturer for Walnutville?"

"Yes."

"Wa'al, git right in; and you ain't no need to pay no fare neither, for I'm the committee that wrote you."

Mrs. Brown was the only passenger, and the driver chewed the long and lonely way by telling her, "folks was thinkin a sight about seein' on her, lots on 'em remembrin' her grandfather." They were only four hours on the road, and when the time for the lecture came Mrs. Brown was escorted to the hall by a gentleman. On the way he exhorted her to speak up, and not be like "them Methodist women, who mumbled so folks did not know when to say 'Hallelujah.'"

The hall, an unpainted building, consisted of a great room with an cognate outside door opening directly into it. There were seats against the wall upon two sides, which the stage-driver explained as being the place where "the old men set town meetin' day." The people who were in their seats turned round and gazed at Mrs. Brown while she took off her wraps and put on her gloves. Telling her escort she was ready, he said he "warn't agoin' upon that roostrum to make a fool of himself; the minister had got to do that."

While waiting for the minister, and enduring the staring of the audience, Mrs. Brown diverted her mind by wondering why a row of nails were settled at the back of the platform. Finally curiosity conquered.

"What are those men up there for?"

"Them? Why, they're the Walnutville brass band, and they're goin' to play. Don't they have no bands where you come from?"

Fortunately, Mr. Snow, the minister, appeared then, and Mrs. Brown trailed meekly up the aisle after him. Obedient to his gesture, she sat down, and he said, "We will unite in prayer."

That exercise, disposed of, Mr. Snow proceeded: "The Walnutville brass band will favor us with 'Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean.'"

The performance was stunning, deafening; but before breath or hearing could be regained the agile clergyman was again on his feet.

"The chorister of the Baptist church will now delight the audience with a song—'There's a good time coming, boys; wait a little longer.'"

The chorister walked slowly to the steps of the platform, and waited, looking severely at Mr. Snow.

"I forgot to say," shouted that much-afflicted man, "that he will be accompanied by his daughter on a Mason & Hamlin instrument."

Then the father and daughter mounted the stage, the organ was wheeled into its place, and the performers had a good time, if nobody else did.

The audience was indifferent to an alarming degree, looking to Mrs. Brown like scores of duplicates of the goddess Pasht who sits and glares at people in the British museum.

Again Mr. Snow: "Mrs. Brown will now read us a piece on the Parthenon."

Mrs. Brown stepped to the front, and, amid stillness so profound that she could hear the breathing of persons near her, read her piece. It took an hour, and during all that time the death like quiet was broken but once, and then a boy who had climbed up on the outside, and peeped in at a window, informed his companions in a hoarse whisper that "she warn't no great to look at, anyhow." Not a hand stirred nor even an eyelid moved when the Parthenon was ended; for Mr. Snow allowed no time for embarrassment, for he was at once on his feet.

"The chorister of the Methodist church will sing 'Rocked in the cradle of the deep.' He will accompany himself."

The same masterly indifference while the Methodist chorister rocked herself violently backward and forward, and while he was wiping his heated brow after he had returned to his seat. But indefatigable Mr Snow knew no weariness.

"The band will again delight us with 'Marching Through Georgia.'"

"Hark! from the tombs," would have suited the temper of the audience equally as well—to all appearance, no better. Finally the minister concluded:

"These exercises will close with a benediction."

He had hardly spoken its last words when the stage driver shouted:

"Here, marm, is the money we've took. You can take your pay out on it."

Mrs. Brown, not accustomed to approving herself, declares she rose to that occasion, for she turned all the money into her pocket handkerchief, and told the driver she would settle on her way to the train. One or two people walked solemnly up to her, many shook her hand, and said plaintively, "We have enjoyed all your lecture," but with those exceptions the solemn silence was not disturbed. To this day Mrs. Brown is in doubt as to whether they think the Parthenon an improved sewing-machine or a new kind of boys' spreader.

Surprising Mechanical Accuracy.

San Francisco Chronicle.

The famous Strasburg clock, which is really one of the modern wonders of the world, exhibited the transit of Venus at precisely the right time and in the right way. On the On the "planetarium" attached to this remarkable piece of mechanism it was noticed a few days before December 6th that the small ball representing Venus was area had a moving toward a point between the sun and the earth and on the day of the transit it stood exactly between them. This, of course, could not have happened had not the clockmaker' ever closed remarkable skill. Perhaps it is hardly fair, however, to call the clock a modern wonder, inasmuch as it is three centuries old.

A "Sheep-Horse."

Detroit Free Press.

A Philadelphia man bought a "sheep horse" of another man, who declared that he had captured it with a lasso in Dakota. He told him also that the sheep horse would produce four crops of wool a year, which sold for $6 a pound, and was used in the manufacture of couple hour shawls. It was performed thus. He offered to sell it for $[illegible] and the man paid $[illegible] to pay $[illegible] in [illegible] of sixty days. But before the time which had the wool dried up and the wool fell off. The purchaser sued the seller for his money.

Level-Headed Lillian.

Lillian Whiting spoke to the Boston Woman's Rights association on women in American journalism, and made the point especially strong that anybody who thought of writing for newspapers merely as a preparation for magazine book work might well give up the idea. The remains of the leading journals are crowded in those of the magazines, magazine have the literary style of the writer, most popular, and the general knowledge magazine. There is no dignity of any work so long as it is for the daily newspaper. As for reputation, the journalist is by far the best paid man in literature.

Arthur Helps: It is better in some respects to be admired by those with whom you live, than to be loved by them. And this not on account of any gratification or vanity, but because admiration is so much more tolerant than love.

POETIC JUSTICE.

John C. Calhoun's Grandson and the Colored People.

There is a pleasant sort of poetic justice in the fact that a grandson and namesake of John C. Calhoun has led off in a movement for improving the condition of the southern negroes and bettering the labor system of that section under the new rules of freedom. Mr. Calhoun, who is a thoroughbred southern gentleman, bought a cotton plantation on the Mississippi bottom lands in Arkansas in 1870. "Determined to interest the negro, to try to have him stick, sticking to the same land, year after year, he adopted an enlightened policy," writes the correspondent of The Sun. He sold goods to the new hands at a fair profit, gave free advice, encouraged purchases to the necessities of life. He asked no hands, explaining the conditions of life and the habits essential to success. Under this policy the negroes have prospered, and on this planter has made money. The land, meanwhile, has increased from 300 to 1,000 acres. The negroes' houses are clean and comfortable, surrounded by well kept gardens and fences. The fields are well tilled and fully produced. All the improvements have been paid for out of the profits. Mr. Calhoun employs 1,[illegible] hands, and no "runner" for other plantations can entice one of them away. The secret of this is that "every tenant shall get a share of the profits." Every encouragement is held out to them to work with their hearts backing their hands. Land is rented to the men for cotton rent, as the negro takes more interest in the crop if he is to have a portion of it. Many of the tenants have large crops, sixty, seventy, or eighty acres, and owning mules enough to cultivate the land hire other negroes by the month. The shiftless, drunken, gambling, lazy negroes have found out that on the Calhoun plantations the man who earns a good living, save money, and accumulates property, while the planter never suffers loss for want of timely help. And the happy result is an example to the policy of fair play—to aiding the negroes like human beings, and giving them a chance to better their condition. The scheme has worked so well that Mr. Calhoun has formed a company to buy other plantations and extend its operations. The correspondent believes that the grandson of the original secessionist has solved the problem how to advance the material prosperity of the negroes of the southern states, and thereby that prosperity to elevate and civilize them into voters of fair intelligence."

President Arthur as a Vocalist.

Washington Critic.

In the departing shadow of Patti's last engagement in this city The Critic, who listened to her dulcet strains and bird-like warbling, was treated to a national opera, which was nothing more or less than a presidential solo. While promenadating through the carpeted halls and rooms of the executive mansion yesterday The Critic had its attention attracted by a series of rich baritone vocalisms proceeding from the private apartments up stairs, and as the last notes of "Way Down Upon the Cloonie Bell By" were wafted out upon the hushed air he halted in front of the parlor door.

"Who was that singing?" he inquired of a menagerie of a swallow-tailed attendant who stood by.

"Sh!" replied the attendant; "that's the president." He sings nearly every evening for his daughter, Miss Nellie."

Just then the watery notes on an accompaniment to an the female grand were borne to the listener's ears and a childish voice pleaded

"Oh, papa please sing again."

And almost instantly the presidential throat was cleared, as a preliminary measure, and the clouds began to roll by again in a clear barytone way, accompanied by Miss Nellie's most exquisite accompaniment.

That time was paralyzed with delight and stood motely drinking in the vajory notes of cirrus, cumulus, silver streaked cirrus and golden stratus clouds as they floated out into the hallway in great bursts of presidential melody. The air trembled, Miss Nellie gave a final flourish over the ivory keys and the listener imagined that he could see the great chief step back and make one of his dignified bows to an imaginary audience.

The Life of a Carmelite Nun.

A subject of conversation here, says a Montreal letter to The Detroit News, is the leaking out of certain facts connected with the establishment of Carmelite nuns at Hochelaga. There has been a little Carmelite colony in our adjacent suburb for several years, but never has ever heard much of them. The nuns are subjected to the severest discipline of all the orders. They wear but one garment summer and winter, a coarse serge gown reaching to the feet, with a hood almost completely covering the face. Their feet are shod with sandals and they are not permitted to wear hosiery. As a special favor they have been allowed, in our severe winters, to wrap pieces of serge around their feet and ankles. They never touch meat, poultry, fish, butter or eggs, and eat only one meal a day of bread and boiled vegetables. Their couches are bare planks with a piece of wood for a pillow and they sleep with one arm covering their their daily dress. Their doors are jealously closed even to women, the presence of the doctor. They pass their lives in silence, even their prayers being said under breath. Their singing of the church service is conducted in a whispered monotone. Such an observance of the vows of poverty, chastity and obedience has proved occasion too severe for the constitution of the nuns, and several of them have died. Others are at the point of death, yet the rule is severe and the nuns resolutely refuse to make any changes in their method of living, declaring that all is in God's hands.

Doctors Must Not Tell.

The Missouri supreme court has decided that information obtained by a physician in a patient must not be disclosed on the witness stand, though the physician declares that the information was acquired while acting in a professional capacity and was necessary to enable him to prescribe as a physician or operate as a surgeon. The court held that it would not do, while the mouth of a physician is closed as to the talk of a patient, to open it as to knowledge acquired from his own diagnosis of the case.

Economy of Time.

The old adage, "Take care of the pence, and the pounds will take care of themselves," may be thus parodied: "Take care of the minutes, and the days will take care of themselves." If the minutes were counted that are daily wasted in idle reverie or still idler talk, in thinking of setting about a task that must be finished, and in looking for things that should not have been mislaid, they would soon amount to hours, and prove sufficient for the acquisition of some elegant art, or the study of some useful science. Almost every young person has something in view which they would like to do, if they had time for it, and, by scrutinizing their appropriation of every hour in the day, they will generally find as much time wasted as would suffice for the desired end, if resolutely redeemed from idleness. A professional gentleman of rare attainments, and one who added to the laborious duties of his calling a great variety of learning, much scientific research, and many elegant accomplishments, was asked by a young lady how he found time for all that he did. He replied: "There is one rule which I have found of great use, and therefore recommend it to you, and that is, always do small things, such as writing a letter, copying out some short piece, making a sketch, reading a review, etc., in small portions of time, and reserve a whole day of leisure for some long and important affair. Never use up a rainy morning in doing a variety of little jobs, and think, because you dispatch a great many, that you have well bestowed time; leave small affairs for odd half hours, and use your uninterrupted moring for something that cannot be done in half hours. You have sometimes wondered at my having time to correspond with so many absent friends; but all my letters of friendship are written in odd minutes, while I am waiting for people who are not so punctual to their appointments as I am." You would think it poor economy to cut into a whole yard of cloth, when you want a little piece to mend with; you would take a scrap from your remnants; just such poor economy of time is it to use up a whole day in little unconnected affairs; let your remnants of time suffice for these.

"A few words on step-mothers," remarks a Western lady: "I don't believe there is a woman in all the whole United States that ever received due credit for raising a step-child. No matter how strong may be her desire to rear it as her own, there are always persons to interfere with the domestic affairs of the family, while if it was her own child they would be beneath sowing the seed of discord and mischief that can never be erydicated while life exists."

ESTATE OF LEROY MEAD.

STATE OF MICHIGAN County of Lenawee—ss

At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Lenawee, holden at the probate office in the city of Adrian, on Tuesday, the 31 day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate

In the matter of the state of LeRoy Mead, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Josephine Mead, widow of said deceased, praying that administration of said estate may be granted to Cyrus Mead or to some other suitable person.

Thereupon it is ordered That Monday, the 30th day of April A.D., 1883, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said state, are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said action and the hearing thereof by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

FITS

A Leading London Physician establishes an Office in New York for the Cure of EPILEPTIC FITS.

From A Journal of Medicine.

Dr. Ab. Meserole (late of Leipsic), who makes a specialty of Epilepsy, has without doubt treated and cured more cases than any other living physician. His success has simply been astonishing; we have heard of cases of over 20 years' standing successfully cured by him. He has published a work on this disease, which he sends with a large bottle of his wonderful cure free to any sufferer who may send their express and P. O. Address. We advise any one wishing a cure to address

WHY BOTHER WH A RIDGLING

When his Value is Doubled?

MR. J. W. LUCAS, of Battle Creek, Mich., pupil of the celebrated "Farmer Jones," makes a specialty of Castrating stock, and handles Ridgers with great success. His system is the only correct one, and leaves the animal less than any other method. He is indorsed by the best horsemen in the country, as a safe and reliable operator. Parties can secure his services by forming a club. Will spay domestic animals, and teach his patrons the art. Send testimonials and descriptive circular. The above cut illustrates his method of securing the animal for operation, which effectually prevents injury to the animal or operator. Address, J. W. LUCAS, Battle Creek, Mich.

If you didn't at once a trial bestow
On that excellent dentrifice—"TRABERRY."

IT MAY SAVE YOUR LIFE.

The manufacturers have yet to hear of a single case of Dyspepsia or Billiousness, when ZOPESA was used, as directed, in which it was not more than satisfactory. Many write that it is a wonderful remedy. We can show where as high as 40 pounds were gained by its use in breaking up chronic Billiousness and Dyspepsia. Its friends increase very fast, and all who use as directed are surprised and gratified.

AN OATH.

CRAWFORD CO., PA., CITY OF TITUSVILLE.

Personally appeared before me Peter Phillips, who, being sworn according to law, deposes and says: That he has been affected with Rheumatism, more or less, for the past four or five years. That last winter he had a very severe attack, and that the pain was excruciating, and he could only move about in his own room by taking hold of something for support. When the disease was in its most acute form, and the pain almost unbearable, he took a dose of Wilson's Lightning Remedy, which caused immediate relief, and the second dose, taken five hours after, made a perfect and permanent cure, and that since taking the two doses he has been free from the disease, or any symptoms thereof.

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The "GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Intermediate points.

MACON MUSIC

The want of anything of sufficient interest to report from quiet, unassuming Make-on is one reason why the readers of the HERALD have not heard from us. After the Cuttings from the Center cut out the Murmurs our worthy scribbler concluded to wait for old Time to heal the flowing wounds.

Miss Bertie Sage, who has been visiting in Iowa during the winter, is home again.

Rev. Wellington DePuy, of Grand Ledge, preached in the Reformed church last Sunday. He and the pastor having exchanged pulpits.

The union Sunday school was reorganized April 8, and the following officers elected for the season:

Supt.—George Howell.
Asst.—Spencer Morgan.
Sec. and Treas.—Estelle Miller.
Librarian—Addie Crittenden.
Chorister—Isaiah Hendershot.

No service next Sunday morning in any of the churches.

Williard Gay and family start for Gratiot county this week, where they intend to make their home in the future.

Miss Hilda Pennington has gone to Dakota in hopes of improving her health, which has been very poor for some time past. If her hopes are realized she thinks of taking up land.—It would be a good idea for some of the young ladies to follow in her footprints. Go west, sensible girl, go west.

Grandma Britton, who has been living with her daughter near Grand Rapids, is very sick with a severe shock of paralysis. For many years she has been a resident of our vicinity, and we regret to hear of her sickness.

Last Saturday four of our enterprising young men went to the big prairie a duck hunting. Their shooting efforts were crowned with success.—One duck fell a victim to their well directed aim. If they had made known their intentions before deciding on the place of sacrifice, we could have directed them to hunting grounds nearer home, where they would have found better game of both "ducks" and "dears."

ADDISON ATOMS.

The long desired spring has sprung at last.

Considerable sickness is reported by physicians here.

Mrs. Ed. Cleveland is very low with consumptive troubles.

Two saloons are soon to be opened on the west side.

The saw mill has resumed work in earnest this time.

E. S. Harrington has just put a glass front in the old Birdsell building, recently purchased by him, and otherwise fitted it up for shop purposes.

Our village is literally filled with foreign-bred railroad hands at present, indeed a stranger on visiting the place could hardly judge from the language spoken whether he was in western Lenawee or in some chance peopled hamlet of the "auld country."

Nearly forty Prohibition votes were polled in Woodstock this spring, and considering this is the first effort made by the party in the township the result is indeed gratifying.

RIDGEWAY RUMBLINGS.

Keep the old plank road well scraped and you will have a good road this summer.

A. B. Clark is away for a new stock of goods.

Cornelius Exelby has a child very low with consumption.

Chas. Pocklington (Esquire till you find out which), is building an addition to his barn.

E. C. VanVleet has moved his barns off the M. & O. line of railroad.

Work on the new road has begun again in good earnest. Work in the township will be begun very soon.

Church social at the home of G. W. Jackson next Friday evening. The literary part will be similar to that of two weeks since.

Jas. Dubois is perhaps the best building mover in the county. He moved the cottage on North street in a day and a half without dropping any plastering.

Election—yes, we had one, but do not know yet who is elected as far as town clerk is concerned. Each candidate was declared elected election night by the board of inspectors.—Both have qualified and both are still contending for that wonderful honorous and lucrative office. The latest is that the court is to settle the question, and that right away. We hope they will both get it.

Our last week's letter, concerning our great election was miscarried by a democrat, at least he brought it back to us and said he forgot to leave it at the printing office.

FIRST REGIMENT ELECTION.

About twenty-seven officers of the First Regiment M. S. T. met at the armory of Company G in Jackson, last Tuesday, for the purpose of electing a colonel in place of Col. E. B. Griffith, deceased. The meeting organized by selecting Captain Bowen of Ypsilanti, chairman, and Adjutant Devlin of Jackson, secretary.

On motion a vote was taken for colonel, and D. H. McComas of Lansing, the major of the regiment was chosen on the first ballot.

The meeting then proceeded to fill the vacancy occasioned by the promotion of Major McComas, and after several ballotings Capt. E. W. Bowen of Ypsilanti was elected. Captains Manly and Lawrence and Adjutant Delvin also received support for the office. After the dead-lock for this position had exhausted twenty-six ballots, Capt. Lawrence requested his friends to support Capt. Bowen, his old army comrade, and the next ballot resulted in the choice as above. After completing their work the meeting adjourned sine die.

In the evening in response to an invitation, the officers visited Gen. Withington's residence in a body, where they were sumptuously entertained and passed several hours delightfully.

CIRCUIT COURT.

APRIL 10.—Circuit court convened this morning at 10 o'clock, as per adjournment.

After spending some time in fixing the dates at which cases should be called, Geo. Powell, the Tecumseh young man who is charged with beating Zebina Taylor, of Tecumseh, out of a horse, was arraigned, and pleaded guilty.

Edward Franklin, of Tecumseh, was also arraigned for receiving stolen goods in September last. He pleaded guilty.

Sentence on the Tecumseh people was deferred until some future date.

Lewis Conrad, the fellow who pleaded guilty to beating J. S. Peck out of a board bill by false pretences, was sentenced to ninety days in jail.

A. Bowen, charged with embezzlement from Pratt Bros., at Morenci, was sentenced to 90 days in jail.

Chas. Jacobs, the fellow who skipped town to avoid arrest on a warrant, and who afterward's was arrested and pleaded guilty to obtaining $2 of a Morenci man by false pretences, was sentenced to stay in the county jail for 90 days.

Prof. Cocker, of the University, died at his home in Ann Arbor last Sunday evening. Dr. Cocker was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1821. When a young man he left England and spent several years as a missionary in the islands of the Pacific Ocean. In the Fiji Islands he, with several others, was captured by the cannibals, and while the death song was being sung around them, they succeeded in breaking through the line and made their escape. He was engaged in business successively in New Zealand, Australia and Peru. In 1857 he came to Michigan and entered the Detroit Conference of the Methodist church. In 1869 he was appointed to the pastorate of the Central Church at Detroit, but resigned to take the position he occupied at the time of his death. His death is a great loss to the University. The students regarded him with a respect akin to reverence, and it will be difficult to find anyone that can fill his place in the hearts of the students.

The South Eastern Michigan Bee Keepers Association willl hold their spring meeting in Adrian, at Plymouth church chapel, Wednesday April 18. This association comprises the counties of Monroe, Lenawee, Hillsdale, Jackson, Washtenaw, Wayne, Livingston and Oakland. It only costs 25c (ladies free) to become a member, but all are invited to meet with us, as a large number of important questions will come up for discussion. Anyone having anything new of benefit to bee keepers are requested to bring it. Ample room will be furnished to exhibit. Reduced rates have been secured at the hotel. Please come and bring friends with you, and let us have a good meeting.

VENNOR'S PREDICTIONS.

April 5th and 6th will likely prove stormy in lake regions and lower provinces. Newfoundland probably coming in for heavy gales.

The 10th to 12th are probably dates for severe frosts. These were experienced in 1882.

The 20th and 21st stormy and wet in majority of sections.

The month will end cold and stormy and May day may be ushered in with snow and sleet in northern and western sections, and cold rains at others.

There will be some unusual terms of warmth during this month, but altogether it will partake of its average character and be of a favorable description.

Casting a glance into the future through our old weather glass we note as follows, written just as the ideas strike us, without regard to order:

Continued precipitation and cold weather generally for the summer, with continuous high waters and floods.

A windy summer full of storms.

An open autumn with little or no snow at end of year, even in northern sections.

A cold, stormy and wet October.

An open winter for 1884, very little snow and a backward spring.

An unfavaroble year for agriculturists and much sickness.

Such are some of the notes entered in our weather book, and we publish them merely to have them on record for comparisons in the future.

Adrian Times: It is rumored in railroad circles that trains on the Fayette and Chandler branches will soon run direct from Fayette to Trenton, thus utilizing that portion of the old Canada Southern lying between Grosvenor and Deerfield, which has for some time lain idle. This, of course, will leave Adrian off the line of those branches. The cause for this resumption of the old line is said to be a lawsuit which a Deerfield farmer has brought to recover that portion of his farm occupied by the track not in use. We understand that trackmen have received orders to place the necessary frogs in position, so that the line can be used as above mentioned.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

VILLAGE OF TECUMSEH,
Council Room, April 6, 1883.

Regular session.

Council convened at the usual hour with President Mills in the chair.

Present, the entire council except Mr. Breesie.

The minutes of preceding meeting read and approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

On Finance:

Recommending the payment of the following claims, as presented:

E. B. Wood	$150 00
C. A. Stacy	145 00
Stacy Bros	5 50
Wm. S. Comfort	4 80
H. E. Anderson	15 45
Slayton & Son	14 08

On motion the report was adopted, the bills placed on file and orders directed to be drawn for the several amounts.

REPORT OF OFFICERS.

The Treasurer presents his annual report with vouchers, which on motion is referred to a special committee for examination.

Messrs. Heesen, Burridge and the Recorder are appointed as such committee.

The President reported that according to instructions given at last session, he had settled with James Ming, but did not as yet secure the services of another man, as he wished first to confer with the council on the subject. After such conference the President was instructed to secure the services of John Mesler for one month with a view of retaining him, if found to be a suitable person, for one year at a salary of $400.

PETITIONS AND APPLICATIONS.

Of Slayton & Son, Chas. Teachout & Son, Gainsley & Co. and others, asking for the repeal of the resolution of council passed May 3, 1880 and amended Oct. 5, 1881. The prayer of said petitioners is granted, and by resolution of council the resolution aforesaid as amended is abrogated, annulled and repealed.

NEW BUSINESS.

The President announced the standing committees for the year as follows:

On Streets:
Messrs. Heesen, Bresie and Sparks.

On Finance:
Mckinnon, Heesen, Steinhoff.

On Cemetery:
Steinhoff, Burridge, Bresie.

On Public Health:
Burridge, Steinhoff, Heesen.

On Public Grounds and Buildings:
Smith, Sparks, McKinnon.

On Fire and Fire Limits:
Bresie, Smith, Burridge.

On Ordinances:
Sparks, McKinnon, Smith.

Council proceeded to the appointment by ballot of a street commissioner, marshall, attorney, and physician to the Board of Health.

The following are the appointments:

W. C. Jordan—Street Commissioner.
Henry W. Stevens—Village Marshall.
Edwin B. Wood—Village Attorney.
Chas. M. Woodward—Physician.

Officers' and other bonds were fixed by the council for the ensuing year as follows:

Village Marshall's bond, $5000.
" Treasurer's " $8000.

And the bonds required by law to be filed by retail dealers in intoxicating liquors, $4500.

On motion, a special committee, consisting of Messrs. Burridge and the President was appointed to review and examine the new compilation of the village by-laws and ordinances and report as soon as convenient such corrections and additions as they shall deem desirable.

It being reported to the council that the money in the contingent fund was exhausted, and that it will be necessary to loan $500 for contingent expenses until the collection of taxes, it was Resolved that the sum of $500 be loaned for the augmentation of the contingent fund of the village, and that an order be drawn for such sum with interest payable June 1, 1883, such order to be made payable to the person loaning said sum.

The Cemetery Committee is requested to take into consideration the rates charged for use of vault and report an amended schedule of rates at next meeting.

The following claims were presented and referred to Finance Committee:

P. J. Farley, for oak lumber	$47 63
J. M. Wilcox, 5 bbls oil	21 10
L. S. & M. S. R. R. Co., freight	1 80
S. W. Temple, lumber	3 13
S. Catlin, services as physician	15 00
T. C. Cummins and T. D. McKinney, services as assistant engineers	35 00
H. Brewer & Co., as per bill	71 70
R. Cairns, hay and straw	11 00
W. C. Jordan, as per bill	16 50

The President made the following recommendations to the council:

That the members consider carefully the subject of paving the business portion of Chicago st.; also the necessity of purchasing a safe for the safe keeping of the village books, papers and records; and that before expending any more money on water supply or fire protection, they thoroughly investigate the Holly system of water works.

Council then adjourned.

P. S. MCKINNON,
Recorder.

TOBOGGANNING.

The Peculiar Winter Sport of the Canadians.

Ottawa Letter in Detroit Free Press.

It was announced that the usual afternoon toboggan slide party at Rideau hall from 3 to 5 10 would be held instead in the evening from 8 to 11 [illegible] This change of hour necessarily changed the whole programme and was death to the [illegible] and his daughter the Canadian pastime of tobogganning in all its glory.

You say this is not to tempt you if you have never experienced and therefore cannot recall the exhilaration of a Canadian winter night. This means that there is snow three or three feet deep, hard as pebbles, clean, white—of course you know it is white, but such a white! There is a tang in the air, with every star sparkling; it is cold, but without wind.

On such a night as this don your warmest wraps, take your skates or your toboggan and go out of the house, out over the snow, tramping until you are tired. But the spectacle at Rideau on these occasions is no ordinary one. Lord Lorne and his popular staff spare neither expense nor trouble to render it a scene never to be forgotten. You say, "Oh doubtless very pretty; lots of snow and gay dresses about and a lantern or two."

Is that all? Ah, if you could [illegible] along Sussex street with me by the bank of the frozen river. Now we have quickly left the [illegible] Parliament hall behind Ottawa in the distance; this is the suburb of New Edinburg.

What is this strange red light there in over the approaching pines and brings out the turrets of the Government House? And now you see, coming apparently from nowhere and ascending into the sky, two gigantic waving ribbons of fire! Here is another, there a fourth, streaming and darting, but now you lose sight of them. We have passed the ridge and are now in the grounds of the Government House. On the left a break in the cedars and the pines shows you a charming bit of the river and distant hills, called the "Princess Vista." The drive to the house is a short one, and now we alight at the side where numerous other sleighs have already deposited their more punctual occupants. Looking down into a kind of ravine immediately below, you get your first glimpse of the bewildering scene. Huge bonfires crackle and glow and illuminate in every direction. The fiery ribbons are parallel rows of Chinese lanterns suspended from poles that edge each toboggan slide. More Chinese lanterns are fastened to the tall, dark pines that cover much of the ground. The vastness surprises as well as the coloring. They appear to stretch away into the infinite, those beautiful floating lamps.

Torches are also fixed in the snow. What a glare, yet what an indescribable softness from the blended lights! And the strange figures, clad in some unearthly fashion—there is not one hat among them; they number five hundred.

Down some wooden steps we go until we find ourselves in a small room with a large stove, around which are gathered so many people resting a moment from snow-shoeing, skating or tobogganning that you are obliged to wait, and so you have a moment to examine the costumes.

Nearly all are clad in blankets, that is in blanket suits for the gentlemen and outer wraps of many different styles for the ladies. The favorite color is white, with a red woolen sash, but many pale blue, navy blue and crimson ones are seen. They were once ordinary blankets, but, dyed at the request of the wearer and trimmed with light colors, they present a most novel and striking appearance. The long hood at the back is often drawn up over the fur cap or "tuque" which covers the head. The "tuque" is a knitted cap of red and blue, with the point and tassel hanging over one side. The effect on a young and pretty face is magical. These coats suit the need of the moment admirably for nothing warms quicker than the motion of tobogganing, and no garment is more graceful when one is seated. Some of the young men have adopted the Canadian toque, and it is a question how long the fur cap will stand against it.

Leaving the warm room and the band overhead playing waltzes for the benefit of three in the rink, we will emerge again into the cool air. Stop! Look out! A slide crosses here. You may be run over by a toboggan, and that, I may tell you, is pretty certain to end in but one way. Coming to the edge of the slide you can look up and you wish to watch for a moment before committing yourself to my charge, for I intend to take you down. The slide is first an artificial one of wood about as wide as an ordinary dinner table, and it is about as perpendicular as it can be. Suddenly a whiz and something has passed you.

"Was that a toboggan?"

"Of course."

"And people on it?"

"Of course; you don't suppose the fun consists in sending down an empty toboggan, the bundreary's solitary bird, do you?"

Watch for the next one. Up at the top a kind of bar is drawn aside, and you see one load prepare to start. Now, once again the curious whiz and they have passed us, shot down into the place and darkness at the bottom with lightning rapidity. But they arrive for the most part safely and toil up the steep again eager for another go. Now is our chance. Here is the toboggan. It is, you see, made of wood, a little over a foot and a half wide and about five feet and a half long. The curved end protects your feet. And you must hold on well by the sides. You will sit down, please—it is not uncomfortable; don't look at it like that—see the thick cushion I have provided for you, and I kneeling behind you will steer. Now we are ready to start; look for a moment down the long, narrow white road we have to travel bordered with torches. And now—we are off!

Crunch! whiz! two lines of fire; your breath blown out of your body, and here we are out on the soft level snow, not a whit the worse for something that was half flying, half dying. You want to go again? I thought so. There is the fascination of the pastime about it.

One thing is certain, our Canadian girls do not lose, but rather gain by such an exhibition. They are at least natural and unrestrained, and no thought of their appearance mars their girlish and enthusiastic enjoyment. At the first sleighs are called, and after good exercise, good fun and good champagne, everyone returns warm, radiant and happy.

Dickens Immortalized.

Detroit Free Press.

Dickens is to be immortalized by the Boston & Providence railroad in the names of its switch and pony engines. Among them are the "Dick Swiveller," "Sam Weller," "Micawber," and "Pancks." The newest switcher, just received from the locomotive works, is called "Jack Bunsby." How will Howells feel now about Dickens not being as renowned as he was once.

She Silenced Him.

She said she wanted a ticket "to Wyandotte and return," and the pale gentlemanly agent, with dark moustache, asked, as he took up the pasteboards, "Single?" "It ain't any of your business as I know," she replied tartly. "I might have been married a dozen times if I'd felt like providin' for some poor, shiftless wreck of a man." He doesn't ask ladies if they want "single" tickets any more.

A Man who Stole Six Locomotives.

Middleton Argus.

Six locomotives awaiting repairs, have stood for some time at the Erie Railroad car houses at West End. Recently Charles Doering, who has been out of work for a month, discovered them and began stripping them of their journals and all their trappings. He was at work for two weeks without detection and during part of the time by a man whom he employed and paid by the day. Thursday of this week the railroad officers discovered the mischief and put the case in the hands of the police. Doering and his assistant had left nothing of the engines save the smokestacks, boilers and trucks. He had sold the greater part of his plunder to a Hoboken Junkman, who, it is charged, supplied him with the tools to assist him in his depredations. Doering was arrested next day and is held for trial. The junkman was also taken into custody.

BROOKLYN.

One of the Phenomenal Suburbs of the Earth.

George Alfred Townsend.

Brooklyn is one of the phenomenal suburbs of the earth. It is one of the youngest cities in all the east. The younger great city in the east after the revolutionary war was Baltimore, which cut off a large part of Philadelphia's trade. Then New York shot ahead of Philadelphia. Finally Brooklyn was shaken off the frances of New York and in the year 1850 the whole county in which it is contained had under 50,000 inhabitants, of whom nearly 2,000 were slaves. In that early day the Brooklyn villages meditated a bridge over to New York which they were just three-quarters of a century in advance of. In 1824 all the real and personal estate in Brooklyn was assessed at $2,000,000, and the share taxes were about $6,500 a year. In 1849 Brooklyn had 100,000 inhabitants. In 1870 it had nearly [illegible] of whom only [illegible] It is the sea-side city of New York, New York itself being inshore and up a bay, while Brooklyn has its back on the bay and its true front on the ocean. It is also becoming an enormous manufacturing city. By the last census it had nearly $22,000,000 invested in manufactories and 5,200 establishments, employing 18,000 operatives and turning out $[illegible],000,000 worth of goods. The use of steam has made it possible to have manufactures anywhere where physical labor can be commanded and the raw materials can be brought cheaply.

Brooklyn has an elaborate water front, not only on the East river, but on several other bays which make up from New York bay, from the ocean, and towards Long Island sound. It has such room to spread over and such generally level surface that ground and habitations command no fancy prices, as in New York, and still the city is dependent on New York for nearly all its institutions. That is a provincial society after all which has to depend on the pulpits for its great sensations. Mr. Beecher, with his volubility, transparency, sympathy and pigment, would have been a very great man in New York, while in Brooklyn he is too great a man, and therefore browses over the surrounding population. He is like a Russian bloodhound one of my friends once brought into a small village. He went to his business the next morning in the city, and when he got home that night he found all the people in the town living in the second story, being afraid to come down for fear of the dog, and the dog himself had gone almost wild at being treated so strangely.

A Georgia Bridegroom's Misadventures.

Atlanta Constitution.

A young gentleman of Lowndes county "met his fate" in the person of one of Lowndes county's fair daughters, and every arrangement had been made, the time appointed, the guests invited for a consummation of the interesting event. The time came for him to come over to claim his bride. He got in his buggy and drove to the new bridge at Rocky Ford, but the swollen current had been too much for the bridge, and it was impassable. He hastily retraced his steps a mile or two and then drove rapidly down to Startling's ferry, thinking that the high water would not prevent his crossing on a flat, and, perchance, by hard driving, he could make the time. He put whip and made as fast time as possible over a wet and bad road. Arriving at the ferry he was greatly troubled at finding that he could not cross. He next thought of the Belleville ferry, eight or ten miles lower down the river. At once he made for that place, but before he reached the flat he got into a lagoon of water, and after driving some distance into it he saw that he could not cross.

He turned his horse to retrace his steps, and as soon as the animal got out of the road it commenced to bog and plunge in wild distress. The young man hastily displaced his clothing preparatory to getting out to cut the horse loose, and in doing so he lost a valuable pistol and some gold coin which was laying loose in his pockets. After some considerable difficulty he got the horse out of the bog and rolled the buggy out by hand. His only alternative now was to travel up the river twenty-five or thirty miles to Quitman, take the cars for Valdosta and hire a conveyance, which he did. When he arrived at the place where he was to claim his bride he was nearly two days behind time, and he, of course, found the family and friends in a disturbed state of mind, for they did not know that the river was impassable, and could not account for his failure to come to time. A few words explained the trouble, and the next day they were made happy in each other's love.

The Wrong Bounce.

Detroit Free Press.

"Suppose," began a little red-headed man with a wild look in his eyes as he halted a policeman on Porter street the other day—"suppose my mother-in-law drops down upon me in October and remains right along until now occupying the best room, fretting at the children, putting my wife up to be cranky, and greeting me daily with such epithets as brute, hyena and miser."

"Yes, suppose she does?"

"Suppose that I finally cease to endure and bounce her out?" "Can she have me arrested?"

"If you assault her she can."

"Would I be fined over $10?"

"I think not—not for carrying her out-doors in your arms."

"Thanks. Between this and 4 o'clock some one will get bounced. In other words I shall pass the Rubicon."

At 10 o'clock that night the same officer found the man in a drunken sleep in a lumber yard four blocks from his house. As he hauled him out into the light he found one eye closed, his face scratched, his collar torn off and his vest so split up the back that it would button twice around him.

"Here—wake up—wake up! You are drunk!" shouted the officer.

"Yesh, I'm drunk," was the thick reply.

"You are the man who was going to bounce his mother-in-law?"

"Yesh, shame man—shame man."

"Well, where did she go?"

"Where'd she go? Oh, yes, I 'member now, Shay?"

"Yes."

"When 'er man bounces his mother-in-law which of 'em goes?"

"She does, of course."

"Then (hic) then it sheems that (hic) somebody has made thumping big mistake, for I'm the party lef' on outside of shouse!"

When Saloon Became Salvation.

New York World.

A young Swede had an order to paint a sign "Saloon" for a saloon keeper at Trenton, N. J., and got as far as "S a l" when he went to a salvation army meeting and became so enthusiastic that he believed it would be wicked to finish the sign for its original purpose. He therefore completed it "Salvation" and hung it over his bed and the saloon keeper had to order his sign elsewhere.

The Reason Why.

"No kiss," he said, pleadingly, "no kiss from my darling to night?" "No!" she said emphatically; "no kiss—I hear there's mumps in your family."

Bric-a-Brac a Nuisance.

"No, sir," said the practical man, "no bric-a-brac on the mantel for me. It's a nuisance. Where's a man to put his feet?"

An International Question.

Washington Critic.

It is very evident that our Madagascar neighbors are not well acquainted with the history of our country. On Thursday afternoon, while standing at the tomb of Washington, at Mount Vernon, the venerable Secretary Frelinghuysen was bending low, apparently in a deep study, when one of the envoys turned to the interpreter and asked what inspired the secretary. The interpreter explained that it was customary in the United States for great men to weep when in the presence of departed greatness, and that Secretary Frelinghuysen was, no doubt, thinking of the glorious deeds of the great Washington, and it made him sad.

"Who was this Washington?" asked the envoy.

The interpreter briefly stated that Geo. Washington was one of the first to take up arms in defense of the colonies, and that he was the first president of the United States, and was customarily called the Father of his Country.

The envoy in a few minutes walked over to where Mr. Frelinghuysen stood, and looking up into his sad face, said, in a sorrowful tone, "Old man, why wasn't you the father of your country? Ain't you old enough?"

When this little speech was translated to the secretary, he walked off, and did not shake the rest of the day appear friendly with the inquisitive envoy.

FIREWORKS OUT WEST.

How Mr. Exbeadle Saved His Own Life.

Laramie Boomerang.

Many years ago, when Denver didn't have any opera houses, and the Rocky Mountain country was terra incognita of the world, there wandered out to the region of Fort Benton a man named Exbeadle, who made himself unpopular among the Shoshones by killing some of their most prominent men whenever he could catch them away from home.

As a result of this course of procedure Mr. Exbeadle had a large private cemetery, and hostilities were declared by the tribe.

Mr. Exbeadle was a speculator, and one day fortune threw in his way a lot of fireworks that didn't meet with a ready sale and he purchased them, more for his own amusement than anything else. These he put to one side, and didn't think of them again until one day there was a council of war in the Shoshone tribe, at which it was resolved to extinguish the light of Mr. Exbeadle and send him across the mysterious river.

They notified him that the intention was to make him climb the golden stair in about fifteen minutes, western time. It looked pretty dubious for a moment, and he didn't know exactly what to do, not having time to consult counsel.

It was a dark night in autumn, and Mr. Exbeadle felt that the morrow would be of very little interest to him.

Like an inspiration, however, came the recollection of his fireworks. He rose and said:

"Gentlemen of the forest, you apparently have the bulge on me, and I admit you are largely in the majority, but you do not know me. I am a medicine man from Michigan, and I can make it mighty interesting for you, if you carry this thing too far. I just say this for your own good, and more in sorrow than in anger. If you take out my vitals and feed them to the vultures, I will linger near you in the spirit, and I will annoy you pretty plenty. I am aware that I have plunted some of your leading men in the cold, cold ground; but that isn't a marker to what I will perform when I get out of the flesh, where I won't be delayed by the inclemency of the weather.

"I will now proceed to show you a few little amateur efforts of mine as a medicine man from away back."

Mr. Exbeadle then let off a new style of sea serpent from a slight elevation.—It was the biggest thing in the line of pyrotechnics that was ever turned loose west of the Missouri. It shot out into the dark about nine feet like a car-load of delirium tremens, and squirmed through the inky bosom of night like an uneasy lemon in his sleep. The gathering warriors of the tribe took one horrified look at the hissing emissary and lit out. They left all their baggage that didn't happen to be tied to them; and there hasn't been a Shoshone Indian seen there since.

Mr. Exbeadle picked out the best ponies belonging to the tribe, loaded up the rest of the fireworks, and went home. He lived many years after, and became one of the most trusted Indian peace commissioners known in Western history.

Romantic Marriages, Happy and Unhappy.

The son of a leading lawyer in New York, about thirty years ago, was attracted by the innocent face and quick wit of a Welsh chambermaid in his father's house, and declared that he preferred her to all the fashionable beauties who had courted his notice.

His family protested, but to no purpose. The only concession he would make was to consent to go to Europe for three years before marrying the girl. In the meantime, having an independent fortune, the lover placed her at one of the best schools in New York.

The girl was ambitious, and devoted in her affection to the man who had chosen her. He returned, found her more lovely than ever. They were married, and the lady is one of the leaders of society in the city where they live—a noble, refined, charming woman.

An eminent jurist, well known in Pennsylvania in the early part of this century, was "making the circuit" on horse-back, and stopped for dinner at the house of a farmer. The daughter of the farmer waited on them, and the judge—who had been a cynic about women—observed the peculiar gentleness of her voice and a certain sweet candor in her face. After dinner the farmer said,

"Mary, bring the judge's horse."

Mary started to the field, which was inclosed by a barred fence. Laying her hand on the topmost rail, she vaulted lightly over.

"I saw," said the judge afterwards, "for the first time, a woman with the mind and body I should require in my wife. I called again and again at Farmer C's. At last I sent Mary to school for a couple of years, and here she is," nodding to the stately matron who presided at his table.

The sons of the judge and this real Maud Muller all attained distinction; one, like his father, at the bar, another was an eminent divine, and a third was a southern candidate for the presidency. All were noted for their fiery eloquence, and their high sense of honor, and a certain exquisite for fighting which was well sustained by strong physical health. The judge had not been mistaken in Mary's qualities of mind or body.

It must be acknowledged, however, that where one hasty, romantic marriage proves happy, ninety-nine such marriages end in misery. A sudden passionate predilection, or love, will not long bridge over a great disparity of social condition, of manners, tastes and habits of thought. The love fades, dies out, and the antagonistic couple are left irrevocably bound by a hated tie.

How many boys attracted by rosy cheek or bright eye, fancy themselves yoked to women whom they soon outgrow and who hang ever after like dead weights on them, crippling and lowering their whole lives.

How many girls grateful to the first man who chooses them from out of the world of women, mistake gratitude for love and marry a tyrant or a boor.

The Dignity of the House of Representatives.

Daniel Dougherty, of Philadelphia, commenting on the undignified behavior of the house of representatives, said to a friend that, when Mr. Clay was speaker, if he saw a member of the house reading a newspaper while the house was in session, he would send a page to him with instructions to say: "The speaker presents his compliments, and wishes to call your attention to the fact that the house is in session."

Rock a Sun.

But, after all is said, any man who ever started a newspaper in a small town, will swear that so long as he could keep out of the poorhouse he had more fun than you could shake a stick at.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Dear Sir: My wife has for several years been a great sufferer from periodical attacks of Neuralgia in the head. Several of the most eminent physicians had been called upon to treat her, but they could only give temporary relief.

About two years ago she commenced using the Taxaline, and I am gratified to say, since then she has had no recurrence of those terrible pains. I attribute her restoration to health entirely to the use of Taxaline, and in conclusion would say to all who suffer that excruciating of all pains to give Taxaline a trial. Yours etc. T. Shilp.

Jealousy.

Some poet has said, that "All torments of the damned we find is only thee, Oh, calousy, thou tyrant of the mind." This is grandly sweeping and magnificently inaccurate. Any sufferer from Indigestion knows to the contrary. Indigestion, the villian of the tragedy played upon the gastric juices of the stomach can, and does double discount the horrors of jealousy. calousy is often an attendant upon the later, and when indigestion is removed, this jaundiced companion of a deranged liver flies. Taraxine is the best known remedy extant for impaired digestion, deranged liver, and diseases of the bowels and kidneys.

Mr. A. Kiefer: During the spring and summer my wife was a great sufferer from Indigestion and Dyspepsia, caused by a torpid liver. About a month ago she began using your Taxaring, and the first two doses gave her so much relief that she continued the use of it until two bottles had been taken, and I take pleasure in saying that her health is entirely restored.

We All Believe

That it is a long lane that has no turning; that many a shaft at random sent, finds a mark the archer little meant; that no remedy sold will cure coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough and all throat and lung troubles so quickly nor permanently as Dr. Bigelow's Positive cure; that our druggists, Baker and Hall, are very generous to give trial bottles of this remedy free of charge.

Never buy what you do not want because it is cheap.

We All Know

That water never runs up hill; that kisses taste better than they look, and the better after dark; that is better to be right than to be left; that those who take Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic never have dyspepsia, costiveness, bad breath, piles, pimples, ague and malarria diseases, poor appetite, low, spirits, headache or diseases of Kidneys and Bladder. Price 50 cents, of Baker and Hall.

A true man will not swerve from the path of duty.

A Public Duty.

We are not in the habit of puffing any sort of patent medicines in our columns for the business of a newspaper is to let people know what is going on in the world and not to lend aid to what may be an imposition. But we happen to know Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., and can personally testify to the excellence of the medicine which the doctor calls "Favorite Remedy." For diseases of the blood, kidneys, and bowels it has no equal. We would not be without it for five times the dollar that it costs.—Daily Times.

Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day.

Six to Fifteen.

"Having been an invalid for a number of years, I have received more benefit during the last six months from the use of your "Favorite Remedy" than from the preceding fifteen years treatment from the best physicians of New York and surrounding country." Thus writes Mrs. Marion Reeve, in a letter dated at Cornwall, N. Y., to Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y. Is any extended comment needed on this? $1 a bottle. All druggists sell it.

We should do nothing for revenge, but everything for security; nothing for the past everything for the present and future.

Skill in the Workshop.—To do good work the mechanic must have good health. If long hours of confinement in close rooms have enfeebled his hand or dimmed his sight, let him at once, and before some organic trouble appears, take plenty of Hop Bitters. His system will be rejuvenated, his nerves strengthened, his sight become clear, and the whole constitution be built up to a higher working condition.

Our minds are as different as our faces; we are all traveling to our destination—happiness. But few go the same road.

Bashfulness may sometimes exclude pleasure, but seldom ever opens any avenue to sorrow or remorse.

To have fragrant Breath and Teeth like snow,
Foolish and careless you'd be very,
If you didn't at once a trial bestow
On that excellent dentrifice "TEA-BERRY."

IT MAY SAVE YOUR LIFE.

The manufacturers have yet to hear of a single case of Dyspepsia or Billiousness, when ZOPESA was used as directed, in which it was not more than satisfactory. Many write that it is a wonderful remedy. We can show where as high as 40 pounds were gained by its use in breaking up chronic Billiousness and Dyspepsia. Its friends increase very fast, and all who use as directed are surprised and gratified.

B. MINCER

NATIVE OF RUSSIA,

Scientific Optician,

Twenty-One Years Experience

Who has been doing a large business at Adrian for a number of weeks, has testimonials from the best citizens.

Leave Orders at Sink's Hotel.

The delicate construction of the eye makes it necessary to use great care in selecting spectacles.

B. Mincer has made the Eye his special study, and in late years has paid his entire attention to the adaption of Spectacles to the same. Having a thorough experience in making and adapting spectacles to the eye, he is enabled to fit accurately in every case of abnormal vision, known as Presbyopia, Myopia, and Hypermetropia, as well as weak sight, requiring various tinted glasses. His improved Spectacles are of a perfect construction which assists and preserves the sight, rendering frequent changes quite unnecessary. They confer a brilliancy and distinctness of vision with an amount of ease and comfort not generally enjoyed by persons using spectacles. His lenses are ground on the most scientific principles, rendering them as clear as when in the full strength of youth.

B. Mincer has some flattering testimonials of some of the leading citizens and oculists in the state, as to ability in fitting spectacles.

ADRIAN, Dec. 8, 1882.—To whom interested: Having for some time past used glasses to improve my sight, without satisfactorily gaining my object, I called on Mr. Mincer, optician, of Detroit, who readily adapted glasses to my eyes, with which I am so well pleased that I cheerfully speak in his favor. His method of examination, and its application in selecting glasses to fit the eye, can only be acquired by a knowledge of that useful organ to which must be added extensive experience. He has also adapted glasses to Mrs. Baker's eyes, with which she is well pleased. I recommend him to all who need glasses adapted to their wants. Poor glasses are an abomination.

V. A. BAKER, M.D.

ADRIAN, Dec. 21, 1882.—I have investigated the work of Mr. B. Mincer, optician. I have reason to believe that he understands his profession, and adjusts excellent glasses on scientific principles.

C. RYND, M.D.

ADRIAN, Dec. 15, 1882.—I take pleasure in recommending Mr. Mincer's glasses as being of a very superior quality, and his method of fitting them to the eyes as the very best.

S. A. POWERS.

ADRIAN, Nov. 18, 1882.

I have used spectacles bought of Mr. B. Mincer for the past three months, and find them superior to any I have ever used, and can cheerfully recommend him to any one in need of good glasses, and the benefit of his experience in the science of optics to adjust proper lenses.

DANIEL TODD, M.D.

We clip the following testimonials from the Bryan Press relative to the merits of B. Mincer's glasses, who has sold a large number of spectacles in this vicinity, and in every instance has given entire satisfaction:

ANGOLA, Ind., Dec. 13, 1879.

This will recommend to you Mr. B. Mincer, who has made this place a point for sale of glasses; from his long practice in this particular business he has perfected himself so as to readily adapt glasses to any condition of the eyes, and I recommend him as a first-class, thorough optician.

I. S. B. WILLIAMS, M.D.

MORENCI, Dec. 2, 1881.

I take pleasure in recommending all persons who need glasses to aid the eye, to use the kind furnished by Mr. Mincer, who is capable of fitting the eye with the very best quality.

REV. J. CRABBS.

FAIRFIELD, Mich., Dec. 10, 1881.

Mr. B. Mincer, optician, of Detroit, has occasionally visited this county, and has fitted me with a pair of glasses for myself; also my wife, with which we are much pleased, and would not part with them, and we take pleasure in recommending him to the public as a thorough optician and will fit any eye.

J. H. LAVERTY, M.D.

DELTA, Ohio, April 26, 1882.

I take pleasure in recommending all persons who are compelled to use glasses for weak eyes or any other affected by age, or by the use of poor glasses, to try B. Mincer, optician. I have purchased of him a pair of glasses which are the best I ever used.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE.

Wonderful Surgical Operation—Removal of Urinary Stones from the Bladder Successful.

Mr. Simeon Tetsell, of Saugerties, N. Y., has been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they call Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Difficulty or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife, and then gave his great Blood Specific, "Favorite Remedy," to prevent their reformation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tetsell's recovery was prompt and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific for all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Malaria Disorders, Constipation of the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from the constitutions of women. TRY IT. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Dennedy, Roundout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery.

HERE AT LAST.

After Long and Weary Waiting Relief is Brought to those who Need it.

"Well, Pat," said an Orange county Physician to a complaining Irish patient some years ago, "for that pain in your chest you had better go home and put on a mustard plaster. I can't think this minute of anything better. And by the way," added the doctor, turning to a friend, "I wish somebody would invent a real good plaster—something actually helpful for such cases as Pat's. Maybe they will sometime, when its too late for me to use it."

When BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER was placed on the market about ten years ago the doctor's hope became a fact. Because of the rare medicinal virtues inherent in it, its rapid action and sure results, the Capcine is fast displacing the slow-acting plasters of former days for all affections to which a plaster is ever applicable. Price 25 cents. In the middle of the genuine is cut the word CAPCINE.

THRENODY.

[Georgie L. Heath.]

Oh, what am I to the world
As it rolls on its tireless way?
And what would its teaming millions care
If I should die to-day?

The sun behind the hill
Sets with a golden glare;
Should my heart be still for another night
I'm afraid we'd be worse off here to-day!

The winds would rear and rave
The ocean ebb and flow,
But if I had passed to another shore,
This world would not care to know.

Let the world go on its way
The sun, and the wind, and sea,
There are those whose love is my sun and life,
Who are all the world to me.

Let the millions come and go,
Wherever their way may be;
But the chosen few that my heart enshrines
Are world enough for me.

POOR RACHEL!

A Great Actress Consumed at Last by the Intoxication of Success.

Youth's Companion.

Born of poor parents, and leading a wandering life in early years, she had a joyless childhood, with few advantages of education or of society. Coming to Paris at 12 years of age, she sang in the cafes to add a few sous to the family income. Her voice was thin, and she was not an effective singer, but her acting won attention and she was placed under eminent masters.

Under their training she appeared on the stage and won great applause when only fifteen years of age. At eighteen she had taken Paris by storm and was earning a thousand dollars a night, which was more than the whole income of her family during any year since her birth. The sudden influx of wealth was of small value to her. Her greedy father took it all, and allowed her scarcely enough to purchase suitable dresses for the stage. The family life was still pinched and unsympathetic. But Rachel cared little at this time for wealth or sympathy. She was devoted to her art, and ambitious to attain perfection in it.

At twenty she was without a rival on the French stage. At twenty one London was at her feet, and she bore herself with dignity in the saloons of, nobles and in court circles. Even the duke of Wellington paid her honor.

But her fall began in the very intoxication of success. The moral purity, hitherto guarded with sacredness, was surrendered to the flattery of false friends, and society closed its doors to her blighted womanhood. She grew reckless of public opinion, lost her ambition to excel in her art, and cared only to use her great powers to win money. With loss of character and lofty aims, came also loss of health, and before she was thirty her power over an audience had waned, and ere she reached her fortieth year she was in her grave.

Pauvre Rachel! Who can envy such a creature? Her own sad words reveal a weary heart. "It seems to me that death were preferable to this life, which I drag along as a convict drags his chain." "I have had great success, but how? At the expense of my health, of my life! The intoxication with which an admiring public inspires me, "passes into my veins and burns them up."

A Widow With a Glass Eye.

The prettiest widow in all this great metropolis, says a New York correspondent, is a lemon-and-lily blonde, ranging only from five to eight inches in thickness, and proportionately small in width, with no more than 18 years to her age, and enough of a fortune to allow of doing just as she pleases about marrying again. I was in her party at the Madison Square theatre the other night, and we were weeping more or less over the sorrows of the play. Allowing for the hearty dinner which I knew she had eaten, there couldn't have been room in her thin figure for a great amount of emotion; and when I saw that tears were welling up in one of her eyes and not in the other I surmised that the dinner had got entirely on one side of her midriff and the sympathy all on t'other. But I was wrong; and this is how I found out. The widow's escort was a sappy young fellow, whose love was as profound as his shallowness permitted. After puzzling himself awhile over the dryness of one of her eyes, while its mate was brimmier, he asked for an explanation of the phenomenon.

"And which eye do you admire most?" she said.

"H-h-hard to tell," he stammered. "The one w-w-with the tears sort of melts a fellow, d-d-don't you know, and the one without the tears sets h-h-him ablaze with its flashes."

"On the whole, now, which one do you prefer?"

"Wa-wa-well, I think the d-d-dry one."

"I'm so glad, Dolphy, to hear you say that," and the widow beamed rapturously into his face, "because the eye is a glass one, and I'm sometimes afraid it disfigures me."

This revelation lost her a lover, and I don't suppose she will miss him from the gang, and she certainly had fun with him while he lasted.

They Kept the Door Shut After That.

Stage drivers among the Rockies and Sierras learn to be as peremptory as they are daring, and probably from the same necessity. They will have their orders obeyed. This saying that in the instance here told might not have built his scarecrow story some bit of fact.

A correspondent of The San Francisco Post relates the following incident of a stage ride through the mountains: We were going to say that on this particular trip we passengers were exceedingly annoyed by the persistence with which young Foss (the driver) demanded that stage doors be kept closed, particularly when their being opened caused an appreciable circulation of air.

Just as we were rounding a particularly narrow turn in the face of the cliff, Foss noticed that the inside door, so to speak, was again being held ajar. Promptly putting on the brakes and bringing his horses to a halt, he descended.

"Do you see that rock?" he said, pointing to a huge bowlder ahead that barely left room for the stage to pass.

"What of it?"

"Only this. Last season a stage was passing that rock when somebody opened the door. The door caught on the rock, and as it opened further just pried the whole business over the cliff. That little creek way down there is one of the hind wheels caught on a tree. Now will you keep that door shut?"

It took half an hour to get that door opened when we got to Calistoga, every individual on board having separately tied it shut with his handkerchief.

Tom Ochiltree's Joke.

A story is going the rounds at the expense of Congressman-elect "Tom" Ochiltree, which, The Boston Traveler says, is vouched for as entirely correct by that distinguished Texas statesman. Once when he and Mace were both staying at the St. Charles hotel, New Orleans, he remarked to a friend that the "slugger" did not look to be a very quick man, and finally made a bet of a basket of wine that he could give him a blow and escape punishment by instantly apologizing, before the fighter had time to put up his fists. Accordingly Ochiltree approached the champion of the ring, and without a word struck him on the nose with his open hand. But before he could open his mouth to utter the apology, the bystanders saw a vision of a fiery red beard and mustache, and a nice new dress suit presumed to inclose the figure of a man, knocked from the end of the bar through the sliding doors out on the sidewalk. Ochiltree was at once picked up and repaired by his friends. Then they assisted him into Mace's presence, and he explained that he had tapped that worthy's nose, merely to carry out a wager, and said he was sorry—which was quite evident. "Then that's all right," quoth Mace, turning to the crowd; "and I'm glad H' didn't 'it 'im 'ard."

Nothing like It.

No medicine has ever been known so effectual in the cure of all those diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood as Scovill's Sarsaparilla or Blood and Liver Syrup for the cure of scrofula, white swellings, rheumatism, pimples, blotches, eruptions, venereal sores and diseases, consumption, goitre, boils, cancers, and all blood diseases. It purifies the system, brings color to the cheeks and restores the sufferer to a normal condition of health and vigor. It is asserted that the ordinary cosmetics used by ladies are productive of great mischief. We believe that is so, and that a better means of securing a beautiful complexion is to use some good blood medicine like Scovill's Blood and Liver Syrup, which cleanses the blood and gives permanent beauty to the skin.

Ideas are the great warriors of the world, and a war that has no ideas behind it is simply brutality.

A Startling Discovery.

Physicians are often startled by remarkable discoveries. The fact that Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and all throat and lung diseases is daily curing patients, that they have given up to die, is startling them to realize their sense of duty, and examine into the merits of this wonderful discovery, resulting in hundreds of our best physicians using it in their practice. Tomato Plant Juice Kills Insects.

According to the Michigan Farmer, the tomato plant is an insecticide. The stems and leaves of the tomato plant are well boiled in water, and this decoction, when strained and cold, is syringed over plants which are infested by the green fly and other insects. The liquor when once applied leaves behind a peculiar odor which prevents insects from coming again for a long time. The writer in the Deutsche Gartenzeitung, who has tried this insect remedy, states that he found it more effectual than fumigating, washing, etc. A house of camelias which had become hopelessly infested with black lice, was effectually cured after two applications of tomato liquor with a syringe.

Where to strike an attacking dog is thus told by Land and Water: "When you have the good fortune to be armed with a shillelah, do not says General Hutchinson, hit him across the head and eyes; bear in mind that the front part of his forelegs is a far more vulnerable and sensitive spot. One or two well applied blows upon that unprotected place will generally disable the strongest dog."

Rheumatism Positively Cured

in the shortest time. Write for free 40 page pamphlet on rheumatism, to R. K. Helphenstine, Druggist, Washington, D. C.

A young man dressed in the height of fashion, and with a poetic turn of mind, was driving along a country road, and upon gazing at the pond which skirted the highway, said: "Oh, how would I like to lave my heated head in those cooling waters!" An Irishman overhearing the exclamation immediately replied, "Bedad you might lave it there and it would not sink."

Fell Down.

Mr. Albert Anderson, of York st., Buffalo, fell down stairs and severely bruised his knee. A few applications of Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil entirely cured him.

Talk of the bravery of the sterner sex! Do you remember the first time you asked her, "Will you take my arm?" While you trembled all over like the narrative of a stump-tail dog, and experienced the sensation of having swallowed your Adam's apple, what did she do? Why, she took your arm as coolly as she would eat a pickle.

The death of Peter Cooper of New York City was a national loss. The Evening Post, in a sketch of his long and useful life says:

Mr. Cooper was saving, without being parsimonious; shrewd, without being sharp, careful, without being timid. He had acquisitiveness strongly developed, but what he acquired he put to good use. Honest and open in all his dealings, just and tolerant in his judgments, courteous and considerate in his conversation, he was a man respected by all the world. His religious views were never thrust upon anyone, and his philanthropic works were never confined to aiding the believers of any particular doctrine. The Sermon on the Mount would have always been sufficient to cover his religious beliefs. Such a man and such a life belong not alone to one city nor to one state; he is a representative of civilization. It is such men as he whose lives and whose influence build up the strength of the land.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, April 6th, 1882.

If ever a theatre seems to rest under an unlucky star it is the Cosmopolitan. On the first night that it was opened the curtain was accidentally set on fire. Not long after a part of the gallery gave way, a panic followed and it is [illegible] that no lives were lost. Not long after [illegible] some more but quietly was righted and the entertainment finished before much harm had been done. On Wednesday night a panic followed an alarm that the house was afire. Not one was killed, though the scene was [illegible] the exploits of some but few days which [illegible] the position of the management. Most of all—the theatre is not paying, and they say that Manager Hooley is seriously thinking of abandoning the project of running it all summer. Among actors who are looking upon superstitious, the house is gradually getting the name of marked, and a number of men and women in the profession have openly announced their intention of never [illegible] Some have suggested that Kate Claxton play a month's engagement there. If during that time nothing shall come wrong, then it might be taken for granted that the spell had been broken.

On Monday the new Fulton Market was opened and a noble structure it is throughout, with its hard wood and marble fittings, bright, cheerful well ventilated interior and attractive exterior. The occasion was further enlivened by the exhibition of trout, the season for which commences on April first in this State. Such a crowd of people as thronged the market from six o'clock in the morning till ten in the evening I have never seen. The throng was in fact so great that one could scarcely get a glimpse at the fish much less obtain a full view of the rich and rare specimens to which every state in the Union, Canada, England, Scotland and Germany had contributed. Of course one must eat trout on that day in order to preserve one's reputation for observing the proprieties. I was much amused however, to see a couple of very knowing youths at an uptown restaurant in the evening, discussing the finely trimmed pieces of shad and asserting that after all trout were the only fish fit for a gentleman to eat. Another folly that the first of April brings with it is that every dude about town feels in honor bound to arm himself with a rod and fly hook and sally forth to a Long Island preserve, pay a hotel proprietor a round sum for the privilege of fishing, and stop at the Fulton market in the evening and purchase two or three fine specimens to take home with him. His fish cost him from ten to twelve dollars a pound, but the owners of the preserves and the dealers in fishing tackle do not mind this in the least. The former get the money and lose no fish, while the latter are enabled to make sales which otherwise they could never accomplish.

Peter Cooper is to be buried to-morrow and with him goes the last of a generation which lived without grinding those possessed of less wealth or standing than themselves into the dust. He was a good man if ever there was one. I think I wrote you some months ago that a movement was on foot to raise a monument to him in Central Park. Nothing came of it because the venerable philanthropist strongly expressed himself as opposed to it. I am told however that the matter is to be taken up again. A committee is to be formed, subscriptions are to be received at a number of places, and what is best of all, the donations of large amounts is to be discouraged. The gentlemen who will probably take hold of the movement would be in favor of having nothing but penny contributions so as to make the movement as popular as possible and therefore as worthy as possible of the memory of the grand old man.

There will be less moving this month and on the first of May than there has been for many years. Rents, it seems, have as a rule reached their high water mark, and although in some cases landlords did succeed in raising tenants a trifle, they have in a majority of instances wisely decided to leave well enough alone, and even to yield a little in the case of desirable tenants. Owners of the huge caravansaries called apartment houses are feeling not a little uneasy over the prospect of their investments.—The recent fires of these vast structures have thoroughly alarmed people, and as they pass the vast six, seven, eight and nine story houses, they say to themselves "how ever will we escape from these in case of fire," and prefer to remain in the smaller houses. The first apartment houses paid all the way from ten to twenty per cent. interest on the capital invested in them. In a few years, people who are now building flats will be glad to get their money back, minus the interest.

A queer character was buried Thursday, this was Prof. Felix Simon, the composer and music teacher. For 40 years he was a famous singing master, and there are few singers of to-day who are not acquainted with him.

A project is on foot to secure an appropriation for the purpose of cutting a channel from Traverse bay into Bass lake and thence into Elk river, for the purpose of giving Elk Rapids a fine harbor. This could be done at comparatively small expense, and would give Elk Rapids as good a harbor as Charlevoix.

A. P. Swineford, commissioner of mineral statistics, has made arrangements for an exhibit of Lake Superior minerals at the great exhibition at Chicago June 25th. He has also arranged for the free transportation of all specimens delivered at the nearest railroad station previous to the 10th of that month.

THE NEW PATENT

DUST-PROOF

Stem Winding Open Face Case,

MANUFACTURED BY THE

AMERICAN WATCH CO.,

WALTHAM, MASS.

The case is formed in one solid piece without joints or seams, opening in front only, thus avoiding the usual lap and securing greater strength and durability.

The watches are all open face. The bows into which are screw strong [illegible] fitted with an [illegible] jeweled bushed thread pinion, is attached to the case by screws which [illegible] and the bows are so [illegible] with the body of the case, which is proof against dust and moisture.

To railroad men, travelers, miners, mechanics and others who are almost constantly exposed and who desire to make frequent reference to the watch these qualities are of the utmost importance.

The following letters tell their own story.

VALDOSTA, Georgia, July 30, 1882.

I said one of your Patent Dust Proof Cases about ten [illegible] ago and the other day it came back to me with the request to make it wind easier. On examination I found that the stem was rusty and I inquired into the cause of it. The gentleman stated to me that he was starting some saw logs that had lodged in the bend of the river when his chain caught in a bush and threw his watch into about twelve feet of water, and he was about two hours finding it. When he got it out it was running and he thought all right. In about three months he found that the stem was hard to turn and sent it to me.

I can say that the watch is all that the company claims for it and recommend it to all railroad and mill men.

B. W. BENTLEY.

CLINTON, Iowa, April 29, 1881.

I wish you would send me a spring for the Wm. Ellery Watch. By the way this Ellery is a watch I sold in your Screw Bezel Case to a farmer last fall. The first of January he lost the watch in the woods and found it this week in about one foot of water. It had lain three months and over in snow and water, with but slight injury to the watch—only a hair-spring.

C. S. RAYMOND.

The above were very severe tests, and demonstrate beyond doubt, that for any reasonable length of time during which a watch might be under water it would receive no injury whatever.

We make these cases in both gold and silver, and as a Perfectly Dust-Proof Stem Winding Watch Case, Challenge the World to Produce its Equal.

A FESTIVE HORSE TRADER.

Geo. Powell is his name, and he lives hereabouts when he is at home. Powell deals in horse-flesh, in other words in the parlance of the day, a horse jockey. Last week he sold a horse to Zebina Taylor for $25 which was worth about twenty-five cents.—Then he induced Mr. Taylor to let him take the horse to sell to some one else at a profit. He made a second sale for $6,00, of which he collected $5,00 cash down, and by some slip of the memory forgot to turn the money over to Mr. Taylor. Officer Smyth arrested Powell last Saturday and took him to jail, where his horse trading propensities will be checked for a few days at least.

RAILROAD NOTES.

32 shovels were at work in Pulaski last week.

The contracts for grading all expire on June 1, but there is doubt of their being completed by that time.

The bridge over the big marsh west of Ceresco is completed and ready for the ties. It is 528 feet in length.

Allegan Gazette: The M. & O. R. R. runs within a few feet of the head of Devils Lake, Lenawee Co., and the proprietor of the hotel and grounds at Birdsall's Landing gives the road $500 to establish a flag station there. He will go into the summer boarder business.

Homer Index: The firm of Decrect & Eckerman, who built the depots on the Nickle Plate, has the contract to construct the water tanks and depots on the M. & O. The building gang on the former road will finish work this month, and will then be transferred to this. The depots will be larger and finer than on the Nickle Plate; Marshall and Battle Creek getting the finest two on the line, 60x22, of brick, with slate roofs. The estimated cost of depot, baggage-room and water-tank is $5000. The building will be ready for use before the completion of the road from the west, if the people can fix up their quarrel and other matters pertaining to the choice of sight.

Battle Creek Republican: The gang of hands on the M. & O. R. R. are working about two miles west of the city. The road will be first finished from the west to this city, and as soon as finished to this point a train will be put on and run for general traffic.

Both of the new members are young, energetic and go-ahead young men, well known by our entire community and we bespeak for them a cordial reception to the ranks of Tecumseh's business men.

A TRIP TO HOLLOWAY.

An Enterprising Village on the Wabash—What is Doing There.

This pleasant April weather is serving to draw us out of our winter shell, and we shall endeavor hereafter to enjoy an occasional day among our friends in the country. Yesterday afternoon we took a trip to Holloway. Going down by the Globe Mill, Peter R. Adams' farm, and the old Kennedy neighborhood, we passed over good roads and by splendid farms and soon found ourselves at the growing little hamlet of Holloway "on the Wabash." The village has grown up entirely within the past two years, and since the new Wabash road was opened between Detroit and Adrian. There are now about a dozen dwelling houses in the village, and more in the process of construction. Kedsie's foundry is running regularly, and seems to be doing a good business. A general store conducted by B. Kelly & Co., the postoffice and the depot make up the business portion of the village. We were considerably surprised to see the amount of business transacted by this enterprising firm. Mr. Kelly, the senior partner is an old cattle shipper, and he has charge of that branch of the business. They ship a carload of stock to Buffalo every few days. Mr. Wilson, the junior partner, has charge of Uncle Sam's mail and the general charge of the store. The building occupied by them is a two story double store, one portion of which is used for groceries, hardware, boots, etc., and the other for dry goods, books and stationery, fine shoes and other light goods. Eight hundred dollars worth of goods were placed on the dry goods shelves a few days ago. The firm are now building a commodious wagon shed 90 feet long, in the rear of the store to accommodate their customers' teams in unpleasant weather. The firm is evidently prospering in business and they deserve their success. Our trip was a very pleasant one, and we hope to be more neighborly with our Holloway friends hereafter. The residents of the village are an enterprising and intelligent class of people, well up with the times. They have politics enough to make election interesting, but not so much as to stir up enmity among neighbors. They have good schools and churches near by, and an excellent society of both married and young people. And last but not least, the people evidently believe in "destiny," and have a firm faith in the future prosperity of Holloway.

COUNTY CONDENSATIONS.

Morenci enjoyed a pugilistic set-to on election day.

Four secret societies meet in one hall at Deerfield.

The city clerk of Blissfield receives a salary of $30 per year.

The last issue of the Clinton News completed its fourth volume.

David Carpenter, of Blissfield, who has been sick for some weeks is convalescing.

Parties from abroad are negotiating for the purchase of the Clinton Flouring mill.

The roller skating season at Clinton closed with a grand masquerade last week.

The Free Methodists are soliciting subscriptions to build a church at Blissfield.

Prof. Waterman, of Hudson, has been presented with a willow chair by his pupils.

Rev. N. A. Saxton will remain with the Universalist church of Manchester another year.

Blissfield elected a Democratic supervisor at the last town meeting for the first time in 22 years.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Clinton Woolen Factory took place last month.

John Miller has decided to remove from Clinton and locate at Manchester. Clinton loses a good citizen.

Blissfield had five tickets in the field at the town election. The good people of that town remember the printer.

Deerfield, during a few years past, has been a singularly unfortunate town in the number of fires which have visited it.

Devil's Lake is to have railway communication by means of the new M. & O. road, which will run near the head of that far-famed lake.

Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Ormsby, formerly of Tecumseh, and now of Emmetsburg, Iowa, made Deerfield a short visit last week on returning from a trip to Florida.

Two girls of the State reform school, watching a favorable opportunity, ran away the other night; but after wandering until toward morning, they concluded that theirs was a foolish escape, and so, heartsick and tired, they went back.

A Lansin cor. of the Evening News says: "By the way, Mr. Harkness, who has been absent for several days on account of sickness in his family, has returned to his post, and reports all doing well, and it is a girl, a neat little quakeress.

Bessie Boies, a little 3-years-old Hudson lady, gave a birth-day party last week. It was very amusing to see the display of high chairs at the table. There was probably more happiness at this party than at many a social gathering of older people.

Morenci Observer: A rejected swain of Adrian sued the girl "who went back on him" for the value of the presents which he had given her when his love was fervent and obtained a judgment of over $18. The girl don't propose to be beaten that way, and has appealed the case to the circuit court.

The board of county canvassers met at Dean's opera house, Tuesday afternoon, to canvass the vote of the county for justices of the supreme court and regents of the university. We give the total vote received in the county by each candidate: Blair 3,344; O'Brien, 3,747; Champlin, 4,382, Sherwood, 4,201; Tatem, 713; Sagendorph, 713; Andrew Howell, 1; A. L. Millard, 1; Thos. Crawford, 1. For regents, Hutchins, 3,820; Jones, 3,840; Clark, 4,137; Willett, 4,128; Ewing, 712; Geo. S. Hickey, 712.

Adrian Press: At a law suit in Blissfield, last week, two Riga men were prosecuted for drunkenness on the complaint of Adam Dreher, the supervisor. Barrister Winne, of this city, defended, and in order to cast a bit of reflection upon Dreher's testimony, he cross-examined him upon some of his past deeds and past history. He asked about an assault and battery case in Toledo, and finally he wished to know if "you didn't put poultices on your back to make it sore, so you wouldn't have to go into the army during the late war?" To which Adam replied hotly, "No, I didn't; I put on some Croton oil though." This settled the point in Winne's favor, for the jury acquitted the defendants.

Hudson Post: Mr. Geo. Coppins, one of the pioneers of Ransom, was in town on Wednesday. He said it was just forty-two years that day that he done his last day's work (sowing barley) in old England before he sailed for this country, which he did four days later, landing in New York on May 22, 1840. He spent seventeen months in Oneida county, New York, and then came to Michigan, arriving in Hudson in October, 1842, and going thence to the Burt neighborhood in Ransom where he has since cleared up and brought to a high state of cultivation a beautiful farm. He is now engaged in bringing over from England fourteen men and eight women to engage as farm laborers and domestic help in this section.

While the Duprez minstrel band was serenading the HERALD office Tuesday evening they stood in the street but a few feet from the telephone pole in front of our building. The music was carried over the wires and was distinctly heard at Clinton, Ann Arbor and Adrian.

The law requiring the banks of Michigan to file with the county clerk on the second Monday of April a statement of all real estate held by the same, and its value, a list of the names of stockholders, the amount of stock held by each, and their respective residences, takes effect this year having been passed in 1882. The law also requires that the county clerk immediately after the filing of these statements shall notify the supervisor of each township of the number of bank stockholders residing in their townships, and the amount of their stock.

Adrian Times: Deputies Jibb and Smith reached the city this morning with Oscar B. Hurlburt as a prisoner. Hurlburt, it will be remembered, was connected with one Wm. Ross, last November, in what looked a great deal like horse stealing from W. S. Wilson, who lives just north of the city. Ross was captured at the time, but Hulbert made good his escape. Word was received Saturday evening that Hulbert had been in Hudson that day, and the two officers at once took the night train for that villiage. At that place they secured a team and started, being out nearly all night, and all of yesterday. In their search, which was blind of necessity at first, they scoured a good share of eastern Hillsdale as well as of western Lenawee. Finally the proper scent was found, and Sunday afternoon, at almost nightfall, the man was seen approaching on horseback. Deputy Jibb alighted from the buggy, and was very industriously engaged in fixing the harness, with his back turned to the approaching horseman until just the proper moment arrived, when he quietly turned around and "nipped" him. The prisoner was taken to Hudson and bro't to this city this morning. Hurlburt was astonished. He said he understood the matter had been all fixed up.

DIED.

WIMPLE—On Wednesday, April 4th, 1883, Addie L., third daughter of Walter V. and Sarah Wimple.

Thus closed prematurely, as it seems to us in looking from a human standpoint, a life of unusual promise. Miss Wimple was one of those bright and active persons, of whom we are wont to feel that they cannot be spared. They are so willing to work and so much is entrusted to them that, when removed, they are sorely missed. The desire for life in these active ones is always strong. But it is a generous one. They wish to live that they may be of service, not that they may be served. And yet in the mystery of divine providence, it not unseldom happens that these capable and willing workers are early taken. They are called in the beginning of their work, when what they have already done, though valuable, is yet more precious as a prophecy of what, if spared, they will in future do. When the question of submission to the divine will in reference to her recovery came before Miss Wimple, the struggle was severe. But faith conquered, and from the heart she was able to say, "As Thou wilt." Though a murmur had never previously escaped her lips, from that hour her soul dwelt in an atmosphere serene almost as heaven itself. She was able to keep up and move about to the very last, though at what an expense of effort none knew but herself. The call to depart was a sudden one, but clear testimony came from her lips that Christ was with her, and the manner of her death bore close resemblance to translation. W. H. B.

OSBORN—At his home in Adrian, on Monday, April 9, James Osborn, aged 73 years.

Mr. Osborn was born in Duchess Co., N. Y., Feb. 11, 1810. He lived with his father until 24 years of age. He came to Michigan from Seneca Co., N. Y., in 1832, and located on the farm section 1, Adrian, where he has lived ever since. His first purchase was 166½ acres of land, which he improved from the wilderness and built on this high spot overlooking a vast expanse of country. He also purchased and improved 80 acres in Franklin, 80 acres in Rome and had an interest in one near Tecumseh. Rising by his industry and tact he was able to raise a large family, and amass a considerable estate. Living all this time on a conspicuous theater, he not only benefitted the community, but no one could say he ever willfully wronged anyone. His last sickness was very painful and trying, yet he bore up with fortitude and almost without complaint. A large concourse of people assembled on Wednesday, the 10th at 10 o'clock, testifying by their presence their respect for the genial, practical good man who has left us. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. H. Shepard, of Tecumseh. While vigor was in his frame, he was in the midst of the fray. When force spent itself, he retired from the field, and his weapons passed into other hands more eager, "but he rests from his labors and his works do follow him."

GLENN—On Monday, March 5, 1883, Mr. Samuel P. Glenn, aged 79 years, 4 months and 8 days.

Mr. Glenn was originally from Montour county, Penn., but had long lived at the home, five miles from Tecumseh, where he died. He made a profession of religion at the age of 25. His life thereafter was one of rare christian consistency. The grace of charity was very sweetly exemplified in his life. After years of patiently borne infirmity, he entered into rest, with not a shadow resting on the good name he had always borne among his neighbors and all who knew him. W. H. B.

WHEAT HULLER AND PURIFIER.

T. T. Kneeland's New Patent in Successful Operation—What the Machine Can Do

A few weeks ago we stated in the HERALD that T. T. Kneeland, of this village had procured a patent on a new invention, which he calls a wheat huller and purifier. He has been at work for several weeks perfecting his machine and constructing one for a test trial. A machine has been made and put up in Wilson's steam mill, and on Tuesday afternoon last the trial was made with the most satisfactory results. We called at the mill while the machine was at work and saw it in operation. It takes all impurities and dirt from the berry and also the outside hull or skin, leaving the wheat berry clean and white, but entirely unbruised. Several bushels of wheat were run though the machine while we were there, and it seemed to do its alloted work to perfection. From the manner in which the machine did its work last Tuesday afternoon we can confidently predict that it will work successfully and will come into general use in all the best mills in the country. The inventor claims that as a dry scourer it beats any machine now in use. This machine, which will probably be the smallest size made, is a three horse power, and twenty bushels of wheat were run through it in just one hour. Mr. Kneeland expects to perfect arrangements at an early day to manufacture the machines and place them on the market.

Dr. Willoughby, the attending physician at the Sisters' Hospital and one of Buffalo's most prominent members of the profession, has used it for years, and says:

BUFFALO, Aug. 17, 1882.

Dr. Rush's Medical Association:

Dear Doctors—I unhesitatingly add my name to the long list of regular practitioners who have recommended your "Specific for Consumption," have used it for many years in my practice for all pulmonary affections, and have always been most gratified at the results. I consider it the best compound known for all lung diseases.

Yours, M. WILLOUGHBY, M. D.

Dr. Howard, Professor of Anatomy, College of Physicians and Surgeons, Buffalo, N. Y., says:

Dr. Rush's Medical Association:

Dear Doctors—I have used your Specific for Consumption in my practice for years, with the best results. I consider it a sure cure for consumption, if taken according to directions.

Yours, truly, C. P. HOWARD, M. D.

DR. RUSH'S "REGULATOR" —FOR— Heart Troubles.

A SURE CURE FOR ALL DISEASES OF THE HEART.

Dr. Rush's "Regulator" has never failed to give relief. It has been used successfully for years, in subduing the most stubborn cases of heart difficulties.

Large Size, - - $1.00
Small Size, - - .50

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

Wm. G. Osgoodby, the well-known safe manufacturer of Buffalo, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Newark, and Atlanta, Ga., says:

Office of Osgoodby's Improved Safes, 17 South Broad Street, ATLANTA, Ga., Oct. 17th, 1881.

Rush's Medical Association:

Doctors—The three bottles of Dr. Rush's Regulator I ordered were received by express last week. I have taken nearly one bottle, and am highly satisfied with the result. For over two years I have been troubled with sharp pain at my heart. My physician, upon examination, pronounced it enlargement of the heart, and was unable to give me any relief. The trouble grew worse, and became convinced that I could not be cured. While in New York City, last week, I called on one of the most prominent physicians there, and he charged me $25 for an examination and then recommended your "Regulator." Knowing you to be a regular Medical Association, and not a patent medicine scheme, I ordered the three bottles. I have not been troubled since I commenced taking it, but shall continue and take the entire three bottles so as to obtain a permanent cure. You have my sincere thanks. I am, gentlemen,

Very respectfully, WM. G. OSGOODBY.

Cured of Rheumatism in Two Hours.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 2, 1882.

Dr. Rush's Medical Association

Gentlemen—I have been troubled with rheumatism for two years. I tried all the best advertised oils and liniments, and many first-class physicians without relief. The last Doctor I visited recommended "Dr. Rush's Blood Root Oil." I purchased a large bottle for fifty cents and applied it. In two hours I was relieved, and now am entirely well. Its effects are wonderful, and I believe it the only thing in the world which will cure rheumatism.

Truly, yours, JOHN HUTCHINSON, 389 Erie St., Buffalo, N. Y.

O'Connell and the Slave-Holders.

"Broadway Lounger" in New York Tribune.

August Belmont in his recent lawsuit with an Irish editor only imitated the example of his father-in-law, Commodore Matthew Perry, who was presented in the house of representatives in 1839 by John Quincy Adams for assisting to bring on a duel between Daniel O'Connell, the Irish liberator, and Andrew Stevenson, of Virginia, the American minister from Perry was in some way married to Rutledge and other plantation families [illegible] the wrong of slavery, and [illegible] O'Connell [illegible] against American slave-holders. MARRIAGE IS A TONIC.

A Tar Heel Statesman on the Wedding of Davy Davy.

Gustave Alfred Townsend.

"Marriage is a fine tonic," said the Tar Heel statesman to me as he contemplated the pretty eyes on Broadway. "There is Sprague again in the holy bonds, and the first thing you hyar he's nominated for governor. My opinion is that shot gun'll elect him. Thar's Don Cameron, he gits married and gits up nerve for a surgical operation he couldn't stan' befo' no how, and it saves him fur repentance, I hope. Now Davy Davy gits a wife down at Fayetteville an' he starts right away for California. Another great citizen bound for California!" Jess think of a man at sixty-eight having a bran new honeymoon. It's up to the geniuses of our institutions; it shows that, after all, you can depend upon the people."

Said I to the Tar Heel statesman: "What made him go and do it? 'Hain't Davy Davy?" asked the old man I mournfully. "Way, to form a more perfect union, to insure justice—he was a justice you know, an' to promote the domestic tranquility. He had the constitution for his helpmum every time. He has got the geniality of Lincoln. It'll exercise a powerful mollifying sentiment down out way. If thar's any more vacancies on the Supreme Bench, give 'em to the women. They always act by-gones for by-gones. That's the record of Mrs. Davy Davy Number Two." "How come he to go there?" "Bless your soul! she went an' found him at Bloomington, Illinoy. Davy Davy married a Massachusetts lady! she was true blue, but she died. Davy Davy says, out of his wilderness misery, 'Is thar any lady of eyes partickler to whom as sympathize with my state of mind?' 'Yes,' he answers rackit-yeart, thar's a young lady from North Carlina I see once at Bloomington, Illinoy. Same stock as my wife, too. What's Fayetteville?' He touched down the map, and thar he found Miss Davy Davy, as he knowed by a warm place on the map that kind of burned his bosom. He felt he was on the right track and digested."

A Cruel Joke.

Chicago Herald.

There is a certain prominent man in a California city whom it is not safe to joke with just now. The other night, so the story is related, while he was loafing in his favorite bar room, a small boy came in and handed him a note. He opened it, and his face was perfectly ghastly as he devoured its contents. Then he held a consultation with two of his friends, borrowed a revolver, and left the room with his chums. When the party reached the man's house he let them in at the back door, and they shoes being removed, the stocking-footed trio stole noiselessly through the house. The dull, red glow of the hall lamp threw the man's determined features into strong relief as he paused at his room door and caught the murmur of a voice in caressing tones saying: "There, darling, you and I are all alone in the house, so don't be scared. Now let me put on this nice new collar and pretty coat. Oh, you pet, you little darling," and through a crack in the door came a perfect fusilade of kisses. The enraged husband took off his coat, signaled his body guard, and charged into the room with his revolver at full cock. One look was enough. There was his wife cuddling and petting an English terrier dog. Neither the man nor his companions have much to say about what followed. They want to find the man who wrote that note.

The Herald's Flood Fund.

New York Letter.

There is a report that The Herald has offered to take the pecuniary subscription off his hands and raise the money itself, but it is hardly in shape to be vouched for. If The Herald did take the subscription in hand it would probably do better than Mr. Evarts and his committee have done, anyway. Raising money by popular subscription is a specialty in which that journal has achieved considerable success. Its present fund for the relief of the sufferers by the Western floods already amounts to nearly $40,000. Its Irish famine fund, three years ago, run up to some $300,000. I do not remember how much it raised for the victims of the Michigan forest fires, but the sum was a very liberal one, anyway. This mention of The Herald reminds me of the very general satisfaction felt over the setting aside of the $250,000 verdict rendered against it by a chuckle-headed in the libel suit brought by a South Carolinian, whom one of its correspondents accused of arson, but to whom it made an amends honorable when he denied the charge. It was generally felt that a more outrageous verdict never was rendered, for The Herald withdraw the charge editorially, and offered its columns for any statement the aggrieved party wished to make. He saw fit to sue, and $250,000 he lost, and now the chances are that he will get very little of it, if any.

No More Refreshments.

Mayor Pálmer has caused a great deal of anger and delight in Boston by his refusal to audit the bills of the aldermen for refreshments. They have been accustomed to call every supper after every evening meeting, and some of them, it is hinted with what truth I do not know, at the close, carried home large quantities of wine and cigars. An attempt was made to compromise with the mayor, but he refused to allow a dollar of the claim to be paid. The accounts of two leading hotels amount to over $5,000 for the first six months of this year. The Boston Herald has taken pains to get reports from the principal cities of the country on the subject, and it appears that it is fast falling into almost complete disuse out of fashion.

How to Make an Artificial Aurora Borealis.

St. Louis Gazette.

Prof. Forster, the Berlin astronomer, gave an account at a meeting on Tuesday of the experiments made at the north of Lapland by Prof. Lemstrom, of Helsingfors.

"At about 67 degrees north, Prof. Lemstrom placed a network of copper wire, terminating in many pointed metal points on the tops of two candelabra, one of which was 60 feet high. This network of wire he connected with the earth at the bottom of each hill, in the usual manner. The astonishing result, as foreseen, was the formation of an aurora borealis, rising above the mountain top to an elevation estimated at 300 feet. The atmospheric electricity attracted to the earth by the copper [illegible] this interesting phenomenon."

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

An Oration on Science by Prof. Holdback Remington, of Ohio.

Detroit Free Press.

"My frens," he began, "I has been invited to speak to you on de subject of science. I has no doubt dat some of you has heard de word spoken, or seen it in print at sometime, but how little do majority of you has either realized de beauties, de extent an' de power of science. Science has had a hard struggle, but she can now look down on de heap an' kin reward her frens an' forgive her enemies. How do we know dat de earth revolves on her axis from east to west? Science tells us so. How do we know dat de earth revolves on her axis from west to east? Science tells us so. How do we know dat de great desert of Sahara was once an ocean? Science has dug way down amongst clam shells and sharks' jaw bones. Without science we should be a world without overcoats in winter or sodywater in summer. We would fall from harvest apples, trees an' pick ourselves up without knowin' whether grass, sahsim or agittashun made us cum down instead of goin' up. We should see de moon same as now, but some would say it was inhabitated by monkeys an' green cheese. I am an humble man, but I was a splendiferous locality for a persimmon grove. De sun would rise an' set an' warp de shingles on de roofs, but men would go roundbluffin' fur bets dat she wasn't fifty miles away an' was held in place by wires."

Here the orator paused to scratch his back and take another drink of cider, and amidst a stillness almost solemn he continued.

"Science has done much, but it hasn't done 'nuff. It has giben us de mariner's compass, but we have no mashees shops whar bowlegged men kin drap in on deir way up home an' git de crook straightened while dey wait. It has giben us steam, but we still crawl under de house to thaw out frozen water-pipes de same as de Roman senators did 2,000 years ago. It has giben us grand suspenshun bridges, but whar' am de gas-meter which registers in favor ob de consumer? It has giben us de telegraf, but what man among you ever set eyes on a boot-jack which wouldn't miss a cog fust when you war pullin' on a wet boot de hardest? It has tunneled frew mountains, but we hab found no better way ob making de baby swallow castor ile dan by holdin' its nose, sange as Eve held Cain's and Abel's in de beginnin'.

"My frens, I did not come here to expector aze you wid a tiresome infatuation. Heed well what I have said. Sung up to science. She will keep you cool in summer an' prevent de shrinkin of your winter garments. It is a deep subject for research an' incomprehensibility, an' tru-tin' dat each one of you may abbreate de reflexion of de consequential, I will draw my brilliant climax to a career."

The speaker was in a profuse perspiration as he descended from the platform, and Nelson Smith and Star Route Johnson were appointed a committee to take him down into the alley and rub his spine with an icicle wrapped in a red woolen rag.

Thompson Tells the Old, Old Story.

Max Aiden in Indianapolis Herald.

So I sidled up to Rachel and joined in conversation with her, and we had lots of fun after that. She seemed to kind o' like me from the start. When the time come for us to go away, I asked if I might come to see her Sunday night. She said I might, provided I'd promise to leave at 10 o'clock. Well, I went to see her that night and the next Sunday night, too, stayin' a little late, 'cause we hadn't said anything about the 10 o'clock business. I got to goin' purty often, sometimes twice a week. I was just the deadest gone feller you ever saw. I would dream about her. Every time I picked up a pencil or pen I found myself unconsciously writin' her name. All went well for a time. But one day a little thing happened that made me lose favor in Brown's sight, and he ordered me never to come into his house again. The reason of this was because I sold a black cat's skin for a mink's. He was buyin' furs then and give me five dollars for it, thinkin' all the time the skin was a fine mink's. But when he went to sell it he soon found out different, and if you ever saw a man rave, he did then. I give him back his five dollars, but he swore if he'd ever catch me around his house again, he'd skin me alive. Well, I didn't want to get skinned, so I respected his orders and stayed away. But yet I loved Rachel, and I knowed she loved me. I was in a pickle now, sure.

One day I made up my mind to go and see her, anyhow. So I saddled up one of pap's old gray mares and started off. When I got to her house she was in the yard, and I called to her to come outside, for I wanted to see her. She was barefooted, but she came anyhow. I put the question right square at her. Says I: "Rachel, I want to know if you are goin' to be my wife, or whether you are goin' to do as your father says. I want to have this thing settled right here and now." Well, she hung her head and stood there makin' marks in the dust with her toe, pictures of log cabins and such. Presently she slapped her foot right flat down on the dust, and I saw her two front teeth open and shut, and open and shut. Then I knowed I had her. She was my wife. And so, whether you believe it or not, I walked forty miles to get my license. This is the whole story of my courtship and marriage.

The Pardon Was Granted.

New Orleans Picayune.

A clerk on Canal street, who is standing in the door of his establishment witnessing the parting interview between a fellow clerk and the fellow clerk's sister. The young lady started away, but forgetting something, turned back. Both young gentlemen had turned around, and were about proceeding to business, when the sister-in-law clerk felt a pair of arms thrown around his neck, and his face pressed lovingly by two rose-bud lips.

"I forgot to kiss you, Charley," was the laughing explanation.

"So you did": replied the blushing recipient.

"Oh!" screamed the lady.

"Oh!" aspirated the clerk.

The young lady begged pardon. It is needless to say the pardon was granted.

A Judge's Brevity.

New York Hour.

There were many stories current in illustration of Baron Martin's love of brevity. "Gentlemen of the jury," he is reported to have said, "you have heard the evidence and the speeches of the learned counsel. If you believe the old woman in red, you will find the prisoner guilty; if you do not believe her, you will find him not guilty." Another story is as to Baron Martin's deforming sentence on a peculiarly heinous criminal. The court next day was crowded with people expectant of such an elaborate and eloquent speech to the prisoner as some judges would not have lost the chance of making. Ah, according to the story, that Baron Martin said was: "Prisoner at the bar, you're a very bad man. You'll have ten years of it."

Mexico's Proposed Canal.

San Francisco Chronicle.

Senor Orozco proposes to drain the valley and city of Mexico by constructing an open canal upon such a grade as will entirely empty the lakes Nortbipomo, Chalco and Xaltocan, and also maintain at regulated surfaces the lakes Texcoco and Zumpango. Through the city of Mexico sewers are to be made, which can be flushed by the waters of the lakes, and which are to send their contents to a common point, where the water is purified by deposition, the solid matter to be used for purposes of fertilizing, and the liquid portion to be carried off in the canal. The canal, fifty miles long, is estimated to cost $1,000,000.

The Swedish Singer in Colorado.

The Continent.

Mme. Nilsson says her audience in Denver, Col., was the coldest and most unmusical of any she ever sang to, though, in point of numbers it was the second largest that has yet greeted her during her present tour. Nearly $8,000 was received.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

A Common-sense Remedy.

SALICYLICA.

No More Rheumatism, Gout or Neuralgia.

Immediate Relief Warranted.
Permanent Cure Guaranteed.

[illegible] years established and now known to full [illegible] prominent physicians and scientists to the standing of Salicylica.

SCIENCE.

THE ONLY discovery that robbers the Acid which causes the pain of Rheumatic and Gouty Patients.

SALICYLICA is known as a common-sense remedy, because it strikes directly at the cause of Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia, while so many so-called specifics and supposed panaceas only treat locally the effects.

It has been contended by eminent scientists that [illegible] rubbing, when liniments, liniments and soothing lotions will not eradicate these diseases which are the result of the poisoning of the blood with Uric Acid.

SALICYLICA works with marvelous effect on this acid and so removes the disorder. It is now exclusively used by all celebrated physicians of America and Europe. Highest medical Academy of Paris reports 95 per cent. cures in three days.

REMEMBER!

that SALICYLICA is a certain cure for Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia. The most intense pains are subdued almost instantly.

Give it a trial. Relief guaranted or money refunded.

Thousands of testimonials sent on application.

$1 a Box, 6 Boxes for $5.

Sent free by mail on receipt of money. Ask your druggist for it.

But do not be induced into taking imitations or substitutes, or something recommended as "just as good." JEANETTE'S HAIR

[Mice O'Reilley.]

[illegible]
Your hair, my pet, [illegible] wealth of [illegible]
Your hair, my pet.
[illegible]
Your hair, my pet.
[illegible]
When the spring is young, and the roses are wet
With the dew of morn, I will beg and get
And they entwined your [illegible] hair, my pet.

Oh, you angered my [illegible] your hair, Jeanette,
'Twas a ribbon and [illegible] care, my pet.
But so gentle the bondage, my soul did implore
The right to continue your slave evermore,
With my fingers entwined in your hair, my pet.

Thus ever I dream what you were, Jeanette,
With your lips and your eyes and your hair, my pet,
In the darkness of decades of years I mean,
And my tears fall bitterly on the stone
That covers your golden hair, my pet.

What is Your Hoodoo?

Derrick Dool

Every person, we repeat, has his individual hoodoo. Some high-foreheaded philosopher has said that this life is like a game of cards, success in which lay not so much in winning the game as in playing a poor hand well. But like the rich [illegible] of this philosophy advances, and the thoughtful student of natural effects has at length duly learned to suspect that success in anything, namely speaking, is only to be really obtained by escaping from one's hoodoo. This fact has been virtually admitted, though in a blind dumb way, by all peoples and all classes since the existence of the world. Whether it presents itself in the fetish of the savages, the incantation of the gypsy or the restless promptings of fatality that impel the Caucasian gambler to destroy the precise pack of cards with which his losses have been made, the primary cause remains the same, and at the bottom lies that most windrawn of nature's secrets—the hoodoo.

The sailor's abhorrence of sailing on a Friday; the housewife's caution about getting out of the wrong side of the bed; the old country distaste for meeting a black cat; the world-wide avoidance of spilling the salt at the table—may be lightly put down as "superstition," "relics of barbarism," and all that, but yet that great regulator and originator of all theories—experience, the slow acquired certainty of consequences—remains unchanged and unaffected, as did natural results will be to all time. The cold fact is that all these so-called "superstitions" are but the outcropping of that great, mysterious force of negation in nature, which, always for want of a better word, be it understood, we shall call the "hoodoo."

We have known men to be hoodooed by a pair of boots, a watch, a cane, a horse—anything, in fact, may be the medium for the transmission of this contrary current of negation from the great outside reservoir where it is stored by nature, so to speak. The great art, therefore, is to discover one's hoodoo, and remove or destroy it, and a most important part of the writer's patent hoodoo theory is that all persons can so discover their hoodoos if they will.

The writer remembers a man in the southern part of the state who was hoodooed by his revolver, a certain ornate weapon presented him by a friend in the east. The scrapes and troubles that pistol got its actually well-meaning owner into were something incredible. Finally, by an inscrutable inspiration he recognized his hoodoo, and wrote to his friend, its giver, that he would return the weapon by the same mail, of course recognizing the fact that the hoodoo of one person was not necessarily that of another. Before packing the pistol he withdrew the cartridges and placed it upon the mantel piece. While momentarily absent from the room the thrifty China boy entered and replaced the loads. His employer returned, and picking up the revolver, playfully pointed it at his own temple and pulled the trigger. His hoodoo was buried with him by order of the coroner.

Barnum's Wild Man.

"Uncle Bill" in Chicago Herald.

While on the subject of gating let me tell how, by special favor, I have witnessed a rehearsal of a meal. "Mum, the Hermit" was in this city on Monday. He is the Kentucky wild man, whom Barnum is going to exhibit. I was informed in confidence by his two employes—that is to say the two men who figure as his keepers—that he has been five years preparing himself for a public career. His hair was already long when the ambition to become a curiosity took possession of him, and nature had given him such a hideous face and ungainly form that his fitness for success was evident. Some men, through vanity, overestimate their qualifications for publicity, but it was not so with this chap. His ugliness was transcendant. His training consisted in letting his hair and nails grow immensely, in learning to utter an unintelligible jargon, and in posing and gesticulating like a monkey. But, on being subjected to critical examination by a showman in this city it was found that he lacked one desirable accomplishment.

"A wild man ought not to eat in a civilized manner," said this expert. "You say that you are going to show yourself in a cage, pawing and growling around like a brute. Very well. Now, what is it in a menagerie that catches a crowd more than anything else? The feeding of the animals—ain't it? That's my experience. When you sling a chunk of raw meat to the lion, and he fiercely devours it, the spectators just shudder and shrink back and enjoy themselves. Now, there's the hint for you racket. You must devour raw meat."

"Darned if I kin do that," said the Kentuckian. "I have lived on fried bacon and hominy too long to take to raw meat at the time of life. I swar I couldn't swallow it."

"But it needn't be raw as a fact," said the showman. "It can be cooked beef, faked up to look raw."

The counsel was heeded, and the wild man was instructed from a lion in the beastly art of eating. At this first private rehearsal he tore a piece beef which was blood red, but only partly raw, with fingers and teeth in quite a fierce ravenous way. The performance was crude, but will doubtless become sufficiently startling when perfected by repetition. I am to attend a full dress rehearsal by the wild man in a few days.

Not Proper to Finish.

Literary Manager—"What does Shakespeare mean by his frequent use of the phrase 'Go to?'"

Matter of fact Host and—"Well, per'aps he thought it wouldn't be polite or proper to finish the sentence."

[illegible] I know not whether the dictionary [illegible] spoils better than he that said, "three pins pinning two and two together, and making it five."

New Gospel of Rest.

Hubert Spencer's new gospel of rest is thus expounded: Three weeks' vacation with four weeks' pay!

"A Blessing in Disguise."

484 Adelphi St., Brooklyn, N.Y., March 29, 1881.

No family should be without Allcock's Porous Plasters; their healing powers are wonderful and their efficacy far reaching and lasting. For years past I have seen and known them to cure and relieve the most obstinate and distressing cases of rheumatism, kidney complaint, bronchitis, neuralgia, lumbago, inflammation of the lungs and throat, paralysis, asthma, spinal weakness and coughs and colds. In my own case they have afforded me almost instant and permanent relief. My friends consider them an invaluable and speedy remedy for all kinds of aches and pains. They are a blessing in disguise, and no wife or mother should be without them if she values her peace and comfort and freedom from nervious exhaustion and other ailments. As a strengthening plaster, also for backaches and weakness, they have no equal. I have never found a plaster so efficacious and stimulating, or to give so much general satisfaction. Used in connection with Brandreth's universal life giving and life healing pills, no one need despair of a speedy restoration to good and sound health. Mrs E. Tompkins.

One Trial.

If you have been using other Plasters, one trial of Allcock's Porous will convince you of their wonderful superiority. Take no other so-called porous plasters that claim to be better, they are all frauds gotten up to sell on the world wide reputation of the genuine article.

Love is the great instrument and engine of nature—the bond and cement of society, the spring and spirit of the universe.

Wolcott, Wayne Co., N. Y.
Rheumatic Syrup Co.:

Gentlemen—For many years I have been a great sufferer with rheumatism. Much of the time I had but little use of my arms; my hands were drawn out of shape, and nearly lost the use of one of my limbs. I have been treated by the best physicians, and have taken many different remedies that were highly recommended, but grew worse all the time until I commenced using Rheumatic syrup, and after I had used one bottle I began to improve, and after taking the Syrup four weeks, I was completely cured, and to-day I am as well as ever, and can use my hands and limbs as freely as when a boy. The effect of Rheumatic Syrup has been truly wonderful in my case, and I find on inquiry that it is doing equally as well in every other case where it is being used. You are at liberty to use my name as you choose, as I am very glad to be able to say, as I can, that Rheumatic Syrup is one of the best medicines on the market, and a single trial will convince anyone of its wonderful merits.

A Doctor tries Coe's Dyspepsia Cure.

It is seldom that physicians will admit being benefitted by proprietary medicines that it affords us peculiar pleasure to publish the following: E. Detchon, M.D., Pleasant Hill, Ind., writes: I have used five bottles of Coe's Dyspepsia Cure and find it of great value. I have had dyspepsia for 22 years, and have found no one remedy so effectual in giving relief as Coe's Dyspepsia Cure. I have as a physician, used it in my practice and have been satisfied with its effects.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

ADDISON ATOMS.

A sad and fatal accident occurred Saturday afternoon at Moore, Burrs & Morley's steam saw mill, this place, killing a man named John Bench, who had been taken into employ at the mill only the day previous, and seriously injuring Mr. Norman Parker who was looking on. The facts connected with the accident were gleaned from a reliable source as follows: A heavy oak slab had just been taken from a log when Mr. Bench attempted to remove it by carrying instead of running it back on the car provided for the purpose, and it is thought swing one end of it upon the saw, when it was caught by the teeth and instantly hurled with its bearer directly upon the saw and to the other end of the mill where Mr. Parker stood viewing the work.—When picked up by the hands Mr. Bench's face and neck were found to be literally torn in shreds, the right arm was completely severed below the elbow, while his breast and other portions of the body were mutilated in a terrible manner. He was immediately taken to his residence on Church street, and put under the influence of chloroform, while Drs. Powers and Steward dressed the wounds in the best manner possible, but to no avail, as death soon relieved him of his sufferings. Funeral services were performed over the remains on Monday at the M. E. church. Deceased was formerly a citizen of Jackson, was about thirty years of age, and leaves a young wife and two little ones.—They are the recipients of untold sympathy. Mr. Parker received a severe flesh wound in the leg, besides some injuries about the head and shoulders. The doctors report his case as not dangerous.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

Wheat on the ground has been suffering severely from the cold weather, but is much improved by the recent showers.

Mrs. H. J. Burnham, who has been visiting in this vicinity, expects to go to California soon.

B. Kelly & Co. shipped one car load of stock Saturday and one Monday.

The house of Wm. Fowler is rapidly approaching completion, and will be ready for occupation in a few weeks.

Work has been commenced on the house of Ezra Hoxie.

Dr. Begle has the frame up to his new house.

B. Kelly & Co. have just completed a row of sheds for the accommodation of their patron's horses.

Mr. F. W. Wickwire who has for some time been confined to his bed with paralysis, had a severe relapse last Thursday, but is now improving.

WHEELER'S RAMBLES.

On Tuesday night next L. F. Wheeler will give his Art Entertainment in the Opera House, carrying his audience through Capri, Sicily and Rome. The views of the principal cities of Sicily are very fine, and make an interesting prelude to the series of scenes in and around Rome. The Vatican has the largest collection of statuary in the world and during the evening many beautiful specimens will be shown. The entertainment will conclude with the Lewis' collection of statuary from Lewis' Gallery in Coldwater, never shown before, and a fine new lot of art gems and dissolving views.

Hillsdale Standard: Prof. L. F. Wheeler's lectures: "Illuminated Rambles in Foreign Lands, or an Illustrated trip through Europe," at Hillsdale College, last week, was a success.

Dowagiac Republican: The lectures delivered here on Monday and Tuesday nights of this week, were exceedingly fine. Mr. Wheeler, is evidently a gentleman of fine artistic tastes.—The lecture of Tuesday night, on Sicily and Rome, was particularly fine. We had seen the Coliseum, St. Peters and the Vatican, so many times, that we did not look for much that was new, but Mr. Wheeler realized these "wonders of the world" to us, as all our former studies of them had never done. His descriptive delineation and selected illustrations being arranged in every case to produce the effect upon the mind, which genuine art never fails to do."

Coldwater Republican: Mr. L. F. Wheeler's Illuminated Rambles in Foreign Lands merit success. The views are excellent, sharply outlined and thrown upon the canvass. So much real instructing entertainment can hardly be obtained in any other way in the same length of time.

We wish a lady to take the agency for this town and vicinity to canvas for our Laces, Trimmings and Novelties. No other capital required than good endorsement. No risk and good pay to an energetic worker. Address, for terms, &c., L. L. Gould & Co., 59 & 61 Lake St., Chicago.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

[Official.]

Tecumseh, April 9, 1883.

At this regular session council met pursuant to the call of the mayor.

Present, the entire council except Dr. Steinhoff.

The minutes of preceding meeting read and approved.

[illegible]

The special committee appointed to examine the treasurer's annual report, report that the same is found correct and recommended that the same be adopted.

Adopted.

H. Brewer & co	71 70
Robt. Caine	11 00
W. C. Jordan	18 50

The following claims received by the committee since last session are also recommended to be paid:

Thos. M. Hadley, fees in 5 ill	2 50
Wm. Brown, labor	6 50
Abijah Packard, labor	6 50

On motion the report was accepted and adopted, and orders directed to be drawn for the respective bills.

The committee on streets is instructed to secure what teams and men may be found necessary to do the street work and regulate the price paid for the same.

The chairman of the street committee introduced the subject of opening or extending Union street southward until it intersects Cummins street.

On motion the matter is referred to the committee on streets to be reported on at next meeting.

On Cemetery:

Ask for more time to report on the matter referred at last session.

On motion the time is extended.

NEW BUSINESS.

The bond required to be filed under section 259 of the Public Acts of 1881 was presented for approval by the following persons:

Isaac P. Keyser, James Montague & Albert J. Usborne, John Suffin & Frank W. Darling, and also the drug gist bonds of Marks & Russell.

On motion the foregoing bonds with their sureties were respectively approved by council.

The subject of paving Chicago st. was referred to the committee on streets with instructions to canvass the matter among the business men of the village and report at next meeting of council.

The marshall is requested to report to the council as soon as possible the names of all property owners in front of whose property a sidewalk needs to be repaired or rebuilt.

The marshall is also requested to see that all proper steps are taken to enforce all laws that will promote quiet and order throughout the corporation, especially on Sunday. And particularly is his attention called to the unlawful shooting of guns on that day.

The following claims were presented and referred to Finance Committee:

Sutton & Swan, hardware	$17 23
Geo. F. Payne, assessment rolls	6 44
Wm. C. Jordan	12 00
H. W. Stevens, for oats and corn	26 62

The claim of H. W. Stevens was taken out of the hands of the committee and allowed as presented.

Council then adjourned.

P. S. McKINNON, Recorder.

AUCTION SALES.

B. C. Knapp, having rented his farm, will sell at auction on the premises, 3½ miles west and 1 mile north of Tecumseh, on the Sand Lake road, on Tuesday, April 24, at 12 o'clock M., the following property: Four good work horses, 3 new milch cows, 2 two year old heifers, 2 one year old heifers, 60 thoroughbred breeding ewes, 20 yearling ewes, 80 yearling bucks, 8 shoats, breeding sow, 500 bu. white oats, 500 bu. corn in ear, 50 bu. potatoes, new Deering twine binder, Wood self rake reaper nearly new, Kirby mower, Buckeye grain drill, horse rake, 2 lumber wagons, platform spring buggy, 15 tons timothy hay, single buggy, 2 sets double harness, household goods, plows, drags, corn shellers, fanning mills, &c. Usual terms of sale. Ben Reynolds, auctioneer.

Adrian Record: Railroad Commissioner Innes has spent considerable time inspecting and thoroughly testing the automatic safety switch that has been adopted by the commission er of Ohio, and we understand that Gen. Innes will recommend the adoption of the switch by all Michigan roads. It is said to make railroad crossings absolutely safe without the necessity of stopping trains, thereby saving much time and great expense. By the adoption of the switch by the Lake Shore road it is thought the time for passenger trains between Toledo and Chicago could be shortened at least an hour.

Opinions of Great People.

"I missed the Presidency but my next greatest ambition is to see Wheeler's art entertainment. I shall not die happy 'Till den."—SAMMY J.

"I have seen a great many fine pictures, but I must see L. F. Wheeler's collection, and I don't Cary darn how far I go to see 'em."—ANNA LOUISE.

"I shall have Bis mark a date for Wheeler to show his pictures."—EMPEROR WILLIAM.

Wesley R. Keyser to W. C. Heck. Land in village. 1300.

Jehiel Davidson to John Margeson. Land on sec. 25. $945.

SPECIAL TO ALL.

Persons having farms to sell or any property to dispose of, or those who wish to purchase real estate should call at the HERALD office. We have a number of good bargains. We also have a number of calls for places to rent. We can rent or sell places at short notice and upon reasonable rates.

MICHIGAN STATE ITEMS.

Post offices established at Twin, Schoolcraft county.

Congressman Burrows resumes the practice of law at Kalamazoo.

Gov. J. B. Lindley, of the Lapeer Democrat, receives a call to Marquette, Schoolcraft county.

An otter was caught near Charlotte recently, the first seen in that neighborhood for years; its skin brought $8.

Six bridges have been swept away in Tuscola county this spring by the high water in the Cass and its tributaries.

The new Album company at Battle Creek has received a $12,000 order, and the employes are working day and night to fill it.

The adventists of Battle Creek are seeking to heal the differences of opinion which have kept their college at that place closed for a year, and reopen the same next fall.

A large public hall is about to be built at East Tawas, while a number of citizens are putting up residences. No ice can now be seen from that point, save a small strip in the bay.

W. H. Jones has accepted the principalship of the school at Luther, Lake county, and, in connection with W. V. Morrison, of the Reed City Gleaner, is arranged to start the Luther Lance.

A frog market and packing house is being established at Battle Creek. Only the hind legs are used for food which are cooked and packed in cans, the rest of the frog is used for soap grease.

The Kalamazoo buggy company is about beginning business in that village with a capital of $75,000, and a capacity of 5,000 to 6,000 buggies and cutters a year; M. H. Lane, president and manager.

The wool-growers association of south western Michigan has been organized; president, S. B. Hammond. The meetings are to be held at Kalamazoo, and the first annual shearing will occur May 2.

Battle Creek authorities give Mr Parker $10 for searching last winter for the body of Annie Prosser, and for his services in finding it this spring, as he could not claim anything under the terms of the reward offered.

A number of the citizens of Hanover, Jackson county, who went to Dakota a year ago, have returned, fully satisfied that Michigan people should think twice before leaving it for Dakota. The emigration from that section has stopped.

M. V. B. Curtis, of Lyons, was found drowned in the mill race at that place last week, having evidently fallen in while intoxicated the night before; aged 50 years. He leaves a widow and two children in destitute circumstances.

The Christian church at Marshall having "lifted" its indebtedness, all the churches of that city are now free from debt—something which can be said of but very few places of its size in the state. The secret societies and the city itself are also entirely out of debt.

Two boys of Lapeer, about 14 years old, have constructed a large clock, modeled somewhat after the Columbus clock, that performs wonders in the way of moving characters, among which is a line of the different presidents of the United States who make their appearance at the proper time.

Levi Ellis and William Sherman, farmers of Sodus, Berrien county, blew out the gas at the Commercial hotel, Jackson, Wednesday night, and in consequence came very near sleeping the sleep that knows no waking. Ellis, who did the blowing out, says he never heard of gas before. Why then, did he not snuff it out with his fingers?

While digging a 40 foot well in Johnstown, Barry county, on Tuesday, John Cashmore saw it was about to cave in, and called to the man at the windlass to haul him up, which was accordingly done; but Cashmore had scarcely reached the surface before the entire well caved in and filled up to within five feet of the top. He is now glad he quit work when he did.

The Michigan state horticultural society has for some years been awakening sentiments looking toward the ornamentation of the country school premises in this state. The following is the exact wording of an offer as it will soon appear in the premium list of the society: "For the largest and best collection of cut flowers grown by pupils in school grounds of any school house in any district in this state: first premium, $15; second premium, $10, third premium, $5; fourth premium, $3." "A word to the wise is sufficient."

MRS. SMITHER'S INFATUATION.

NOT A LOVE STORY.

To make home beautiful is a duty. Mr. Smithers had always felt it to be so. She had, therefore, knit tidies, embroidered lamp-rugs, worked paper-racks and table-[illegible] and hung the house with [illegible] and scarcely ever opened any book, except perhaps the Bible of a Sunday afternoon. It was an old habit his mother had taught him, and he generally got half through the psalm he selected before he fell asleep. She could not have told you the difference between the masterpiece of a great artist and an oyster "pot-boiler;" but he had, from dealing in goods for a long while, acquired a certain appreciation of color in upholstery and carpets, and he liked to see things handsome about him. The house [illegible] and sofas, with comfortable, low seats; there were beds into which one sank as into a downy paradise, a splendid steam heater kept up a summer-like temperature all winter. The dining room table, with its big claw feet, was hospitality personified; the side-board, with curly carvings, held nice, round, silver water pitchers, tea-pots and [illegible] the mantel-pieces were the orthodox clocks, vases and bronzes. There were heavy cornices above the window-curtains, and they were looped back with massive cords and tassels. All was perfection—at least its owner believed it to be so; certainly, it was comfortable and costly, and very showy.

"I like to come home to a home like this," Mr. Smithers used to say, rubbing his hands as he stood before the fire. "There is no nonsense about it."

So Mrs. Smithers thought herself, until she went one morning to an amateur lecture "On Taste in Furnishing." When the speaker, a red-haired young lady in a purple dress, without a wrinkle, like a pre-Raphaelite figure, had finished her lecture of which not one word was original, poor Mrs. Smithers was in despair. Taste was evidently something she knew nothing about. She had been proud of her home; now she felt that she should be ashamed to let this purple young lady enter its doors.

How many things were wrong there—her carpets, her curtains, her doors, her mantel-pieces, her very chairs. Oh! if Mr. Smithers had but been there! What would he have said? But Mr. Smithers was away traveling on business. He would be gone a long while; would he learn while away that his house was all wrong? He might. Then it came like an inspiration to poor Mrs. Smithers that, as her dear Smithers never was "mean about money," she might make his house right before he returned home.

Mrs. Smithers, though she prided herself on her good taste, was not a literary woman, and fancied that the Terence Shook so often alluded to in the lecture was some upholsterer. Probably the purple young lady had her own house furnished and arranged by him.

Mrs. Smithers, on going home, looked in vain for this famous upholsterer in the directory. Finally, she ventured to ask a better informed friend, who Terence Shook was and where his "Earthly Paradise," that the purple young lady had spoken of, could be found.

Having received the revelation that the "Earthly Paradise" was a book, and in this the sayings so often quoted were to be found, Mrs. Smithers at once procured it from a bookseller and sat down to study it.

The result was such a house-cleaning as the world never saw before. Various strange men and women, all the servants, and Mrs. Smithers herself, toiled from morning until night for six weeks, and at length, on the very eve of her husband's return, Mrs. Smither's, de[illegible]ted with her success, went through her home and declared it perfect.

And now a carriage drives up to the door, Mrs. Smithers flies down stairs and in a moment quite vanishes in the recesses of an enormous ulster. A trunk is bumped into the hall, a portmanteau follows; the door bangs, and Mr. Smithers looks about for his hat-rack with big mirror, round knobs, and solid umbrella stand. A long thin table, with a rail at either end, meets the eye instead, flanked on either side by a rigid chair with a marble seat and marble slabs into the bottom. The whole aspect of the house is altered. The heavy carpets and broad, silvered rods are taken up from hall and staircase. There is no sign of the register in the polished oaken floor. The heavy walnut banisters are gone, and replaced by spindly oak rails, each one conspiciously fastened by a brass rivet.

"What's the matter? Had a fire?" asked the bewildered gentleman. He doesn't look very much pleased; but Mrs. Smithers is very confident of the effect of the parlors. She glides forward and draws back the portiers. There is no door now.

"You didn't tell me anything had been done," says Mr. Smithers. "Well, you shall have it all fixed up nicely again. What was it? Furnace flues evidently—the furnace isn't going. All your pretty carpets, too!" and he glanced down at the expanse of polished oak, relieved by Turkish rugs, and stops before the mantle-piece. When he last saw it, it was of marble, carved elaborately. Now it was replaced by one of oak, which ran up to the ceiling in a series of shelves interspersed with small looking-glasses.

The portraits of Mr. Smither's jolly old papa and prim-looking mamma, which, in massive gold frames, had filled either recess had been banished. The portraits of the king and queen of the Storks, on long panels, in inch-wide frames of oak and gold, filled their places. This was too much for Mr. Smithers. He fell into a long-legged Eastlake chair, which stood before a small wood-fire, perched upon a pair of tall brass andirons, and took out his pocket handkerchief.

"I wouldn't have parted with pa and ma's pictures, now they are getting so old, for any money," said he. "Tell me all about it, sis."

"Oh, the pictures are quite safe, Jeremiah," said Mrs. Smithers. "They're in the bed-room. There hasn't been any fire, but I found out that we were furnished all wrong—no taste shown at all, you know—and I went to a lecture, and I really felt ashamed; and how I've worked to get things perfect before you came. Don't you think the dado is elegant?"

"What's that?" asked Mr. Smithers, in a queer tone, speaking softly, as he might to a baby.

"The border around the room you know," said Mrs. Smithers.

"Um!" groaned Mr. Smithers. "I'd have thought it was a dado. Well, where's the mantel-pieces?"

"Down cellar," replied Mrs. Smithers, "with the doors."

"Oh!" groaned Mr. Smithers, "how hard those chairs are! I must walk about to rest myself a little. Are the chairs and sofa down cellar too?"

"No, I stored them," said Mrs. Smithers.

After that the married pair walked about the house and looked at the improvements; but Mr. Smithers never smiled.

"Shall I take off the portiers?" asked Mrs. Smithers, trembling.

"Very nice, very nice," said Mr. Smithers, in a soothing tone.

"I'm sure I'm sorry for poor Terence Shook's advice all the while."

"Eh?" cried Mr. Smithers sharply. Then he added, "Don't get excited, my dear. Go to bed quietly and take a good rest, and you'll feel better to-morrow."

"I'm sure I'm very weak indeed, Jeremiah," said Mrs. Smithers.

"But you are tired, you know—tired," said Mr. Smithers. "Go to bed—there's a dear. I'll send Fanny up with you."

"What's the fuss?" cried Mrs. Smithers, beginning to feel mysteriously terrified.

"She shan't, then," said Mr. Smithers. "Go she shan't, Kitty."

Then he himself accompanied Mrs. Smithers to her apartment; saw that she retired, tied a handkerchief, wet with spirits of camphor, about her head and left her to fancies. Poor Mrs. Smithers was afraid to resist, fearing that her husband might be insane enough to be dangerous. She lay staring into the darkness, in the greatest misery of mind, not knowing what her husband might take into his head next. Meanwhile that gentleman had rushed in haste to the family doctor.

"Doctor," he said, sitting down in the physician's study, "I've got a terrible thing to tell you. When I went away from home I left my dear little wife as well as I could wish, in as snug a home as a woman need to have—but you know my house, Doctor. I came home to-night and find the poor soul quite out of her mind—quite out of her little mind, Doctor. She's packed off all the comfortable things, I don't know where; had the doors and mantel-pieces taken down cellar, and hung up horse-blankets on rods and rings; sent away the carpets and rubbed up the floors and scattered about a few fuzzy rugs. She won't have the heater or the gas; and there's a log of wood on some of my grandmother's old brass andirons, and a few candles perched here and there. And she's taken down the family portraits and hung up pictures of long-legged birds; and she's stuck plates, and bowls and cups and saucers all over the wall somehow; and the place is full of the queerest old spindle-legged things, chairs that make you say Ouch! when you sit down on 'em and tables you can't get your legs under. The place is like a charnel-house; but I wouldn't mind that if she was all right in her mind. Doctor, what do you think of her saying she did it by the advice of some fellow or other? I don't remember his name. That's a mental delusion, ain't it?"

The doctor looked at his friend with a solemn countenance, but his soul was full of fun. He knew very well what little Mrs. Smithers had been doing to her house, and why she did it; and he quite understood the effect it had produced on her spouse.

"Smithers, my dear friend," he said, solemnly, "don't be alarmed. It is an epidemic; half the women in the city have it. Your wife will recover. Take my advice: Send her into the country for a week, and put your old things back into the house. You can sell the new ones at auction very readily. Let Mrs. S., as I have said, visit your mother the while. When she comes back she'll see everything all right again, and all will be well. Don't talk to her about it. There'll be no relapse."

"Yes, yes," said Mr. Smithers. "I hope you are right. And you'll go over and see Kitty? I've put her to bed and tied her head up." "You'll go this evening, doctor?"

"At once," said the doctor.

He went. Poor Mrs. Smithers lay sobbing in her spindle-legged bed, with the handkerchief still about her brows.

"Oh, doctor," she sobbed, "I am so thankful you've come. Jeremiah has returned home in such a strange condition. I am afraid his mind is affected. He would have me go to bed at once, as you see. Did he send for you? There was nothing the matter with me until he nearly frightened me to death."

"I've seen your husband, ma'am," said the doctor, solemnly. "He'll be all right in a few days. It was the shock of seeing things so changed about him—that was all. Do exactly as he bids you, and everything will be well again."

Mrs. Smithers promised and obeyed, and went mildly away to visit Jeremiah's mother in the country on the following day. As soon as she was gone, the anxious husband packed off all the expensive purchases to the auction-rooms, where they created quite a furore, and brought more than they cost, restored his doors and mantel-pieces, hunted up his old furniture, refitted his gas-fixtures and set his heater to work, and then went to bring his wife home.

He watched the effect of her entrance into her home with anxiety, but all Mrs. Smithers said was:

"How comfortable!"

"I thought you'd think so," sighed he, wonderfully relieved.

He has never quite understood the matter yet; but Mrs. Smithers does.

How to Cure a Cold.

A medical journal tells of how one man was cured of a cold: "He boiled a little wormwood and hoarhound together and drank freely of the tea before going to bed. The next day he took five pills, put one kind of plaster on his breast, another under his arm, and still another on his back. Under advice from an experienced old lady he took all of these off with an oyster knife in the afternoon, and slapped on a mustard plaster instead. Then he put some hot bricks to his feet and went to bed. Next morning another old lady came in with a bottle of goose oil, and gave him a dose of it on a quill, and an aunt arrived about the same time with a bundle of sweet fern, which she made into a tea and gave him every half hour until noon, when he took a dose of salts. After dinner his wife, who had seen a fine old lady of great experience on doctoring, in High street, gave him two pills of her own make, about the size of a walnut and of similar shape, and two teaspoonfuls of home-made balsam, to keep them down. Then he took a half pint of hot rum, at the suggestion of an old sea captain visiting in the next house, and steamed his legs with an alcohol bath. At this crisis two of his neighbors arrived, who saw at once that his blood was out of order, and gave him a half gallon of spearmint tea and a dose of castor oil. Before going to bed he took eight of a new kind of pills, wrapped about his neck a flannel soaked in hot vinegar and salt, and had feathers burned on a shovel in his room. He is now cured and full of gratitude."

Work in a Great Kitchen.

No; it was not hushed, for there was a simmering and sizzling and subdued sound of frying, like the attunement of an orchestra. They were notes of preparation. Occasionally a lad would dump a scuttle of coke on the floor, and a white-capped man would fill a large vessel with water, and make a metallic sound, like a boy with a stick on a paling. All the time however, as a bass, there was the rustle of steam, as it pulsated and throbbed through the copper tubes. There were a hundred odors in the air. Here was the faint smell of parsley, of thyme, whiffs of cloves, fragrance of mace, specks of onions, slight reeks of garlic, with additions of lemons, all tempered, blended, and commingled into one general savory whole. It was as a Flemish picture of abundance, when one gets sight of the provender, for an epicure, as each receptacle is opened, for an inquisitive woman. Here lay blonde chickens, with legs of pure white veal, and ruddy tenderloins, [illegible] of mutton, all garnished with their lace-work of fat. In this one there is fish; and green, blue-fish, and redsnapper, with vermiculated makerel, and cardinal-colored lobsters,—for they are boiled—with lordly striped bass, complete the ichthyological tableau. And here is the bread batch—all apart in another room—far piled up to the ceiling stand on layers the brown-crusted loaves and the white crisp rolls. Then there is fragrance again; for the inquisitive woman is led by her nose to where the pastry cooks—there are six of them—are compounding their cakes. Could a whole generation of pie-eaters ever get through these innumerable rounds of pumpkin, apple, mince, and custard pies? There is a great seething and tumultuousness about that huge iron drum, and the steam bursts forth now and then as if from a Hecla. But it is not mud which comes to the surface. There tumbles up in the most jolly and inviting way, done up in a linen cloth, vast quantities of dumplings! How they bob up and down in the scalding fluid! How much indigestion is there? I repress the thought, amazed at the man who patiently turns the handle of something which looks like a churn. "What might that be?" I asked. "Hard sauce," is the reply. "Fifty pounds of the best fresh butter, about the same of sugar, and a pound of nutmegs, with four quarts of lemon juice; it takes three hours hard working; the boss do say he is going to run her by machinery, and I wish he would," and the hard sauce compounder wipes his forehead. Just beyond, at a separate table, a Frenchman was making eclairs. The crust had been already turned out, and from a huge bowl, with a brush, he was giving his eclairs a glaze of chocolate. To the main kitchen the visitor returned, attracted by a new odor. Here was the roasting going on. Six, eight, ten separate ribs of beef were slowly turning, with five haunches of mutton, but mutton and beef were not commingled; they were ten feet apart. "Never would do, ma'am," said the roaster; "them two things—beef and mutton—has to be kept apart—the odors of one is agin the other. And taking a winch from a nail, he wound up a jack which was four feet high. Then, the whole machinery, which had been going round in a slow, majestic way quickened its pace. "It's the touchoff at the end that does the business." Then this really great roaster took a basting-spoon that would hold a quart, and slowly trickled the gravy over the revolving beef.

"Billy, show madam the fish-bilers." Billy took off a cover neatly balanced by a chain pulley and weight, and showed in a huge copper kettle, divided into various compartments, the salmon and striped bass which were boiling. Steam pipes gave the necessary heat. During the short interval the visitor had spent in examining the other portions of the kitchen, the scene in this particular locality had changed. Now there was a row of voices, a din of feet, and great odors of cooking meat. Beefsteaks were spluttering; flares of fire from gushing fat waffled up along a vista of broilers; waiters came rushing in with bowls; plates clattered, and spoons were beaten, tattoo-like, on the china. People were so busy roasting, broiling, stewing, that it was no time to ask questions. Where was this? Where was it all happening? Why, in the largest luncheon and dinner restaurant in the great metropolis of New York.—New York Times.

Visiting Schools.

Mr. A. Bayliss, who conducts the educational department of the Sterling (Ill.) Gazette, has the following on this subject:

"The writer occasionally meets a teacher who is frank enough to say that he regards "visitors" as a nuisance to a well-regulated school. This feeling is doubtless cherished by more teachers than care to acknowledge it. It arises from the fact that what seems to be the established form of visiting is necessarily more or less an interruption. Most people desiring to see a school knock at the door before entering, wait to be received, seated, and expect to take a formal leave at the end of their visit. Some expect more or less attention from the teacher in other ways during their stay. Certainly no one person can be made responsible for this evidently wrong way of doing a right thing. It is the custom, and while it remains so a great many of the best friends of the schools will never see them, and a great many of the very best teachers will be glad of it. But suppose it to be understood that visitors were requested to visit the school to suit their own convenience; to enter the room without knocking; to occupy any vacant seat; to retire at any time, to report to the superintendent any discourtesy shown them; and suppose it to be understood that the teacher was expected to go on with the work exactly as though no one had entered or left the room, how long would it be before the teachers, at least, would be reconciled to this kind of an interruption? This is certainly the rational, if not the fashionable way, and no teacher is justifiable in soliciting visits to his school on any other plan."

A Perpetual Skating Pond.

There is a lake on the Saw Tooth Mountains that has probably no equal in the United States. It is about sixty or sixty-five miles from Bonanza, and at an altitude of nearly twelve thousand feet. The lake lies in a basin among the sharp crags of the sudsy Saw Tooth, and is a sheet of perpetual ice. It was discovered only a few years since by a party of prospectors, and named the Ice Lake. The sun seemed to have no effect upon it except in places adjoining the shore. It is simply a great bowl in the hard mountain rock, brimful of solid ice, upon which the rays of the sun descend with no power to penetrate.

The Sexton Writes Us.

Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now as well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly etc.,

Herbert Spencer says: "Life is the definite combination of heterogeneous changes, both simultaneous and successive, in correspondence with external coexistences and sequences." But can Mr. Spencer prove it? He should not make such rash statements unless he has the papers to corroborate them. Life may not be one of those things after all.—This campaign has been too prolific of wild, exaggerated statements.—Norristown Herald.

What the Minister Says.

Homer, Ill.

Mr. A. Kiefer—My Dear Sir:—I have been afflicted for the last four years with derangement of the Liver, causing Dyspepsia, Headache, Nausea, and general derangement of the whole system. I have tried a great many preparations, but found no relief until I tried one bottle of your Taraxine, which has permanently cured me. I also found it to be good for the Ague. I commend it to all who suffer with derangement of the liver. Very truly yours, Rev. Thomas Whitlock,

In France, horse flesh, brought into fashion at the seige of Paris, is gaining rateer than losing favor. Since 1873 the amount consumed has risen from 171,300 pounds to nearly 2,000,000 pounds. In the year 1870 there were consumed at Marseilles 599 horses; in 1885, 1 031; in 1878, 1,523; at Nancy, in 1873, 165; in 1876, 530; and in 1878, 905. Similarly in Rheims and Lyons the figures have advanced some year to year.

The New Discovery.

Dr. Deming's Pile Ointment, the discovery of a physician of wide reputation, who has achieved the greatest success, the most conspicuous distinction, and the highest honors in his profession, is a sure cure for blind, bleeding, itching and ulcerated piles. A single box has frequently been known to cure the most obstinate case, and thousands who have used this great remedy attest its efficacy.—For sale by all druggists.

Reading furnishes the mind only with the materials of knowledge; it is thinking that makes what we read ours. We are of the ruminating kind, and it is not enough to cram ourselves with a great load of collections; unless we chew them over again they will not give us nourishment.

Skill in the Workshop.—To do good work the mechanic must have good health. If long hours of confinement in close rooms have enfeebled his hand or dimmed his sight, let him at once, and before some organic trouble appears, take plenty of Hop Bitters. His system will be rejuvenated, his nerves strengthened, his sight become clear, and the whole constitution be built up to a higher working condition.

In Germany the Government arrests and imprisons boys under sixteen years of age who are found smoking. That is done to make them good soldiers. Is it not, then, an idea for boys who would be good at any kind of business? It is a useless and expensive habit, and "Don't you forget it."

THE WORLD RENOWNED

WALTER A. WOOD

NEW IMPROVED BINDER.

M. E. Conklin, Agent.

TECUMSEH, MICH.

1883. FOR THE SEASON OF 1883.

There has been already sold 439,554 of these Machines.

This record, more than anything we can assert or claim for the merits of the WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES, should commend them to the favor of the Farmer.

The evidence of the success of our machines, and of their unrivalled superiority in merit and public favor, does not rest upon any bare assertion of ours, but upon facts, and these facts are uncontrovertible. We have always maintained, and do still maintain, that the best possible test of merit in Harvesting Machines is their long-continued success in practical use, and upon this standard we have ever been and still are content to rest our claims to public favor.

It is a well attested fact by all who use them, that the Wood Machines require far less repair than any other machine in use. No other Binder or Mower is as durable and free from breakages.

The Wood Twine Binder as now made retains those meritorious features which have rendered it UNAPPROACHABLE BY RIVALS in the past, and which are already familiar to the farming public, and also contains such RADICAL IMPROVEMENTS as will certainly place it ANOTHER LONG STEP IN ADVANCE of all competition. In the family war of the different machine manufacturers the Wood has come off victorious and remains master of the field.

The manufacturers have followed up the new binder, during the progress of the harvest of 1882, through grain fields without number, from one end of the United States to the other, from Texas to Dakota, from Virginia to Vermont, and even as far north as Prince Edward Island, in the British Dominions—where the latest growing grain crops are to be found—and the results of this close and protracted inspection have fully warranted the representations made, strong though they be.

There has been various improvements of importance in the details of both the Harvester and Binder for 1883. All we ask is for the farmers of this vicinity to examine the Walter A. Wood Machines before placing their order, and we have no fear as to the result, as it is conceded by all that it is the most perfect machine in all its details, manufactured.

COMPOUND OXYGEN NOT A DRUG

A NEW TREATMENT.

For Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic and Nervous Disorders.

A CARD.

We the undersigned, having received great and permanent benefit from the use of "COMPOUND OXYGEN," prepared and administered by Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, of Philadelphia, and being satisfied that it is a new discovery in medical science, and all that is claimed for it, consider it a duty which we owe to the many thousands who are suffering from chronic and so-called "incurable" diseases to do all that we can to make its virtues known, and to inspire the public with confidence.

We have personal knowledge of Drs. Starkey & Palen. They are educated, intelligent and conscientious physicians, who will not, we are sure, make any statement which they do not know or believe to be true, nor publish any testimonials or reports of cases which are not genuine.

The Home Atmosphere.

The atmosphere of the household—which either converts to Christ or perverts to fashion, folly and impiety—is commonly created by the parents. They are responsible for it. If the whole trend of household talk and thought and ambition runs toward money-making, or social conviviality, or general godliness of any kind, it is the father and mother who give the pattern. Nowhere is it so difficult to make the best preaching or the best Sunday-school teaching effective on character as in the malarious air of such a home. As soon expect to see oranges in England or grow sugar-cane in Labrador as to rear plants of grace in so godless an atmosphere. The parental influence penetrates through the house with as subtile poison as escaping gas from an ill-built tenement. As Dr. Bushnell has pithily said, in his incomparable book on "Christian Nurture": "Whatever fire the parents kindle, the children are found gathering the wood. They help as either apprentices or accessories." If the father begins the Sabbath with some secular Sunday newspaper, the family will help him [illegible] God's house, the children will hardly care to go at all. "If the mother is a scandalmonger, she will make her children tattlers and eavesdroppers. If she directs her servants to say at the door that she is 'not at home,' the children will learn to be polite liars." If the father puts a decanter on his table, the boys will soon begin to practice with the fatal glass. That rich father who disinherited a son for drunkenness, and in the same will bequeathed his wine-cellar to certain heirs, gave a very palpable proof of the home atmosphere which had poisoned the poor boy. Parental provocations and ill-temper sour the very air of many households, so that the children can hardly escape being cross, snappish and irritable. How can piety breathe in such an air? How can a family be trained up in the knowledge of God's word, when the book of books is seldom opened and the spirit of its instructions is no more known than in the house of a Mussulman? Even in the families of many professors of religion I do not look for any conversions, for I know that the influence of the most faithful discourses will be destroyed by the malaria of the home. It was the atmosphere of Elkanah's and Hannah's Godly house that produced a Samuel. It was the wretched air of Eli's house which ruined Hophni and Phineas.

This subject has a wide sweep. There are sudden changes in the circumstances that affect character as powerfully as changes in climate affect bodily health. The rapid accumulation of wealth is carrying some Christians now up into a rarefied atmosphere, where it is very hard to maintain their humility, their spiritual-mindedness and self-denial. Their new associations endanger their piety; but they need not destroy it. Some Christians grow rich and grow in grace at the same time.

Some civillians go into the foul atmosphere of politics, and preserve their Christian purity. Good men ought to go into political stations and make themselves felt in all our civil affairs. They ought to purify unclean atmospheres. Daniel was Prime Minister in idolatrous and voluptuous Babylon. Prayer was his protector. So may a pure child go into the heated atmosphere of trade, or the highly rarefied air of wealth, or the sin-polluted air of city life, or anywhere else, safely, if he only carry Christ in his heart and keep the honor of Christ ever before his eyes. Jesus does not mean to take his disciples out of the world; but he is able to keep them from the world's contamination.—New York Independent.

ING OF THE BLOOD.

The Most Thorough Purifier of the Blood Yet Discovered.

Cures all Humors, from a Common Eruption to the Worst Scrofula.

It purifies the Blood.
It invigorates the Liver.
It regulates the Bowels.
It strengthens the stomach.
It gives vivacity in place of lassitude; cheerfulness in place of gloom, and robust vigor in place of debility.

Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Disordered Liver, Constipation, Nervous Affections, General Debility, in short all the numerous diseases and discomforts caused by impure blood are speedily conquered by this powerful corrector, the chief and sovereign of all ancient or modern medical discoveries—KING OF THE BLOOD.

Its name is its best description as it is a royal dispenser of the blessings of health and vanquishes the foes that lurk in the blood.

It banishes PIMPLES, SALT RHEUM, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, FEVER SORES, and all SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

It checks CONSUMPTION in its early stages. It has frequently cured it when advanced.

It disperses TUMORS and CANCERS without the surgeon's knife.

It cures DROPSY, general or partial.

It cures FEMALE WEAKNESS and DISEASE.

It reduces in a safe and effectual manner all swellings, external or internal.

It eradicates the effects of Venerial Disease and Mineral Poisons, and establishes a sound constitution.

Many certificates, much further information and full directions for using, will be found in the pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," in which each bottle is enclosed.

Price $1 per bottle containing 12 ounces, or 40 to 50 doses. Sold by dealers in medicine.

If your druggist does not happen to have it on hand, request him to order a supply of it for you, as it will be cheaper than for you to order direct of us, and less trouble.

Do Your Own Fishing.

There was a volume of wisdom in the advice of the elder man to the younger, when wishing for fish, not to stand idly looking at others, but get a line, cut a pole, dig bait and "pitch in."

No man ever got ahead in life by standing with starting eyes and gaping mouth and hands deeply thrust in pockets, watching others. Cutting bait and stringing fish after they are caught, and wishing, never yet amounted to anything. You have got to hold the pole yourself and angle for the best fish. The scaly swimmers wont come on shore to be caught. You must "go for them" in the most seductive fashion, and endure the labor and sweat of taking them in. Lolling on the banks in the shade will never fill your basket, and you will be certain to grow hungry for the breakfast you will gain in this manner—see if you don't.

Get up early and catch the worm and then the fish. Don't be everlastingly the sluggard. There is no sense in the plea that if the worm didn't make a fool of itself, and indulged in a later nap, it wouldn't be caught, and the ambitious bird would return to its nest minus. The theory is comforting, no doubt, but the practice is starvation. Some worm will be out and some bird will catch it. If one particular squirmer escape one swift darting songster, it will become the food of a second. That is a fixed fact in nature. Somebody has got to secure the prize; and one who is earliest and most intent upon the search will be the man.

Do your own fishing. Trusting to another will give you a very small share of the spoils. No such division of labor ever resulted in satisfaction or in fortune. You remember the story of the white man and the Indian and the turkey and the buzzard? Well, that's about how it will be. He who gains the prize will be likely to retain it, and he should. The mere watcher has no rightful claim. It is the catcher who has the best title, and possession is—you know what the law says of it. Rig up your own tackle and attend to your own line. Don't be forever following the miserable example of old Rip Van Winkle, and "doing chores" for others. It don't pay. Bait your own hook and throw in your own flies. If the stream is deep, don't fear to wade; if rocky, risk a fall. Then what you get will be your own, and there will be no grumbling about fair play.

What a strange power is silence! How many resolutions are formed—how many sublime conquests effected—during that pause when the lips are closed, and the soul secretly feels the eye of her Maker upon her! When some of those cutting, sharp, blighting words have been spoken which send the hot, indignant blood to the face and head, if those to whom they are addressed keep silent, look on with awe—for mighty work is going on within them, and the spirit of evil, or their guardian angel, is very near to them in that hour—during the pause they have made a step toward heaven or hell, and an item has been scored in the book which the day of judgment shall see opened. They are the strong ones who know how to keep silent when it is a pain and a grief to them—those who give time to their own souls to war strong against temptation, or to the powers of wrath to stamp upon them their passage.—Emerson.

The most reliable, carefully prepared and best purgative of the present age is BRANDRETH'S PILLS.

They are composed of Roots, Herbs and Gums of the most healing and beneficial kind.

As a family Medicine they are unrivalled, curing Headache, Constipation, Liver Complaint, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia—cleansing the blood of all impurities—acting on the Liver, Kidneys and other important organs, removing the waste tissue, and adding years to the lives of all who use them.

For fifty years they have been used by the American public, and their constantly increasing sales show how they are appreciated.

A Perfect Remedy in So Disease.

Ashfield, Mass.

I am verging on eighty years, and deem it my duty to suffering humanity to say that my long life is due to Brandreth's Pills which have been my sole medicine for half a century. I know the last forty-three years of my life is owing solely to their use. Your Pills saved me many times after the best medical skill in several States had given me up as hopeless. I have had many converts to purgation with Brandreth's Pills, and have seen them perform almost miracles of cure. For children, a few doses have cured measles, scarlet fever, and whooping cough.

In all female troubles and weakness I have never known them to fail. In adult males I have known them to cure worst cases of dyspepsia, rheumatism, kidney diseases, dysentery and diarrhoea; even dropsy, paralysis, and apoplexy have yielded to a persistent course of Brandreth's Pills. In fact I have found them the Life Elixir. They act as continual preventives against the effects of time, disease, and labor.

JOHN H. MANN.

If you sow thorns you will not reap roses.

Trust it Every Time.

A patient, living the under shadows of the Highlands of the Hudson, writes to Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y.: "Your medicine recommends itself so thoroughly that you may hardly care for a statement from me, yet from my own experience of its excellence, and from what I know of its operation in other cases, I should like voluntarily to say that 'Kennedys Favorite Remedy' deserves its high reputation. The public may trust it every time to do what you claim for it." Sold by all druggists. Dr. David Kennedy, Proprietor, Rondout, N. Y.

Down with the nets and the rocks will go.

She is Going to Try It.

A correspondent writes from away down East, in Lubec, Me. to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N.Y.; "I called on you about six weeks ago sick with Bilious Disease. I bought a bottle of 'Favorite Remedy', and it cured me. What I want is some more of your medicine. My daughter is going to try it." Sensible men. He will not regret it, and when his daughter has tried it she will be satisfied too. "Favorite Remedy" is just the thing for the ills that afflict womankind.

Have no friends you dare not bring home.

Geo. H. Baker, Dear Sir: Send me one-half doz. bottles of your Japanese Liniment without delay; it is the only thing that will keep my Cancer from breaking out. Yours. Thos. Crosley, Elk Grove, California.

Perfect Success

Those two words have a vast meaning when fully comprehended. A perfect success can be truthfully applied to Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic, which cures dyspepsia, biliousness, costiveness, all diseases of the kidneys, liver and bladder. It is a perfect tonic and blood purifier; keeps the skin clear and bright, drives away pimples and makes the general health excellent. Price 50 cents. Baker and Hall.

Flowers smell sweet whether men are near or not.

The Doctor's Endorsement.

Dr. W. D. Wright, Cincinnati, O., sends the subjoined professional endorsement: "I have prescribed Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs in a great number of cases and always with success. One case in particular was given up by several physicians who had been called in for consultation with myself. The patient had all the symptons of confirmed consumption—cold night sweats, hectic fever, harassing cough, etc. He commenced immediately to get better and was soon restored to his usual health. I have also found Dr. W. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs the most valuable expectorant for breaking up distressing coughs and colds that I have ever used."

Durno's Catarrh Snuff cures Catarrh and all affections of the mucous membrane.

One man's sorrow should be another man's lesson.

Nathan Kelsey says: Wolcott, N.Y. Gents—I have been troubled with rheumatism several years to such a degree that I have found it impossible to attend to business, which is that of foundry work, and have been confined to the house and to my bed much of the time. I have tried all sorts of remedies, have been treated by several doctors, all to no purpose, until I finally heard of your Rheumatic Syrup, and was induced to try it, and I am very happy to say, after the use of a few bottles, I am as strong and well as ever, and never feel a symptom of anything like rheumatism any more. I cheerfully recommend your Rheumatic Syrup to all who are afflicted with rheumatism, for it is certainly a most invaluable remedy, and to which cannot be said in its praise.

TECUMSEH, MICH., APR. 19, 1883.

It seems as though this weather ought to thaw out the Michigan Legislature.

The present indications are that the star route trial will end sometime before next Christmas.

The emigration from Ireland to this country is likely to be heavier than ever before this season.

The young man who stole a chunk of dynamite and put it in his pocket to experiment with, got a lift he had not counted on.

Johnny Bull has stirred up a hornets nest. His activity in hunting down the Irish reminds one of a man who has turned over a bee hive and can't run away.

Wm. E. Chandler is visiting his old stamping ground down in Florida. An exchange observes that he probably went down there to see that there was a fair count of the President's catch of fish.

Prof. Maclean, upon his return to Ann Arbor, at the close of his libel suit, was accorded an ovation such as probably no resident of Ann Arbor ever received before. Speeches of congratulation were made by Prof Frothingham and others.

President Arthur went to Florida on a fishing excursion. Well, what harm is there in a President fishing if he does not fish on Sunday. And the telegraph informs us that the President observed the Sabbath by going to church and remaining in his room.

The Detroit Free Press appeared last Tuesday in a new spring suit, purchased at the type foundry of Farmer, Little & Co. We receive no paper at our sanctum which better deserves a new spring suit. The Free Press is an honor to the state and a credit to western journalism. May its shadow never grow less.

What ails the politicians? Noty of them want to be a candidate for the Presidency. Like Cæsar, they are all refusing the crown. Senator Edmunds declines, Gen. Butler declines, Tilden has retired from politics, Conkling won't have it. David Davis has got married, and President Arthur has gone a fishing.

A monster meteor fell in Texas on the 14th inst. It was embedded in the earth probably one hundred feet, towers above the ground about seventy feet, and will cover an acre of ground. The shock resembled that of an earthquake. Several head of cattle were killed and the dwelling house of a Mexican herdsman with his entire family was buried in the ruins.

The New York Herald says that the prospect of the utter defeat and overthrow of the Republican party in the near future is not regretted by thoughtful men who have generally acted with it, and that there is a widespread feeling that a complete change in national affairs would be beneficial. The conviction is taking deep root, from the history and experience of the tariff and tax legislation extending over two years, of the total incapacity of the party to deal with such business questions in a fair and impartial manner.

The Quincy Herald in speaking of the Dakota craze which has struck some portions of Michigan says: "To leave Michigan and seek Dakota as a home, is to the man of moderate means far from a positive proof of wisdom. The "boom" is now in its glory. A very few years and the bubble will burst, scattering showers of disaster over a large population.—Michigan as a timber, mineral and agricultural state affords opportunities and advantages that no western state possess. Dakota is simply a wheat growing state. Corn cannot be raised there to any advantage, consequently stock raising will prove unprofitable, even if stock could endure the severe winter. In short, there is nothing, in fact, in the depicted beauties of Dakota, save that the Northern Pacific railroad crosses it from east to west and speculators have land to sell. If our people of southern Michigan have a moving disposition, let them look at the northern part of their own state before exhausting their means in following the Dakota "craze."

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, April 16th, 1883.

A physician who has a large clientage in the upper classes tells me that the opium habit is growing frightfully among the women of the so-called best society! [illegible] and the habit was confined more to the bohemiennes, who picked it up thro their associations with foreigners, but now it has spread [illegible] an alarming extent as, almost to frighten one when considering the future of American womanhood. I can name you a score of women, or rather ladies, prominent in society, the church and charitable work, who are slaves to this pernicious habit. I was recently called to a villainous looking den down town where a woman lay dying, ostensibly from the effects of the drug. She had regained consciousness enough to have the people send for her family physician. Beside her on the divan lay a young unmarried lady, more expert at the pipe than her married friend, my patient. She was unconscious, sleeping off her opium drunk. It is a terrible habit and if the police were only willing they could easily stop it by removing the facilities of indulging in it. It is an open secret that they levy tribute on all drinking places which keep open on Sunday, and on all low resorts, but to allow those places to remain open simply that they may increase their shameful gains is villany.

Speaking of the police, reminds me of the fact that they are now enacting a grand farce by making a so-called effort to close the gambling houses. The joke culminated in the statement of the different police captains that it was impossible to make away with them. These worthy officials have been at work now for three weeks to "obtain evidence" as they call it, and the singular unanimity with which they acknowledge themselves baffled is marvellous. The inside history of the fever to close these places is simply that they wanted to checkmate Anthony Comstock, the apostle of virtue. Don't think I mean to puff Comstock. People familiar with his work say that he is no better than the police, and that he is a humbug who is kept up by his nerve and cheek. He is on the warpath however, and all through Captain Williams. Some months ago Comstock proposed to make a raid on a certain gambling house, and called at the Twenty-ninth Precinct Station House for police aid. When he got it the gamblers had fled. He claimed that the police had given them the tip and made a charge against the sergeant in command before the Police Commissioners.

In a short time a divorce suit will come up in the courts which will give New York something to talk about, and which will cast a queer light on certain phases of metropolitan life. The man in the case is the second son of one of the wealthiest and most prominent importers of wines, and was a junior partner in his father's business in this city. About two years ago he became infatuated with a young woman who was what is euphoniously termed fast. She lived only a block away from his father's house, and his liking for her soon ripened into the most intense affection.

He quietly took her out to a fashionable church one evening and married her. After that he literally loaded her with gifts of all kinds, opened accounts at various dry goods and fancy goods establishments, and had the goods sent to Mrs. ——. Then the whole story leaked out. There were tears and a scene at home, but as the young man said that it was nothing serious he was forgiven. Not long after his elder brother who knew something of the young man's fondness for the woman met her in the street and upbraided her for leading his brother astray. Some remark nettled her and she exclaimed: "Sir, I wish you to understand that you are addressing your brother's wife."—"When were you married?" he asked, but this she would not answer.

He quietly went to the Register of Vital Statistics and there found the evidence. He told his father. There was a terrible scene. The young man was offered the choice of either getting a divorce or being discarded. He declined to do the former and was ejected from home and business. He has several times obtained positions in various commercial houses, but as soon as his father heard of it he got him ejected. For six months he has been doing nothing and living on nothing but borrowed money and the sales of his jewelry. The woman who was faithful to him is getting tired of this kind of life. His father has been hard at work for months to get her to consent to a divorce, although the young husband is more in love than ever. She is gradually coming to the old gentleman's view. As the young man will not consent to a quiet retirement she is going to make the whole matter public, and then the whole story will come out. Such are some of the skeletons in the closets of people we know.

A Manchester woman has been coughing for 19 years. Recently she fell down stairs and coughed upon a shirt button. Relief followed. She expects to be completely cured as soon as she can raise the shirt.

RAILROAD NOTES.

Trains are now running on the M. & O. road to within 16 miles of Battle Creek. If the bridge over the Michigan Central near Augusta were completed the trains would be in Battle Creek within three weeks.

Battle Creek Republican: The timbers for the Kalamazoo river bridge on the M. & O. railroad are nearly ready and will be placed in position and the bridge made ready for the iron within a day or two. Next week the bridge across the river will also be finished.

Battle Creek Republican: A side track is to be put in at the junction to connect it with the M. & O. railroad which runs close at hand. This will give it connection with all the other roads and prevent the large amount of teaming now necessary in moving the material.

The contractors on the M. & O. railroad advertise for teams at $3.50 per day to work between Battle Creek and Yorkville.

Mian Leader: A man calling himself C. A. Williams visited our village last Tuesday with orders on several merchants here, purporting to have been given by Horace Allen, a well-known farmer living near this place. The orders proved to be forgeries, or what were intended to be, for they were poor imitations of the genuine. It is generally supposed that a [illegible] show to spell his own name. [illegible] signature to these orders was "Allen." C. Gauntlett is out $5.; J. M. Ford $8.50, and A. W. Hardy $9.50. Search for the culprit was instituted Wednesday morning, but as yet he is at-large.

More logs have been banked along the Cass river, in Tuscola county, this season than in any one season for several years. There are at least 10,000,000 logs yet to run down, aside from a great quantity of cedar belonging to A. C. Young, of Caro.

It will now require a strong-minded woman to pass a millinery shop without pausing long enough to look over the spring styles.

USE "TEABERRY" and you will find our teeth become as pearls; Till fragrant make the breath of all, boys, women, men and girls.

SEE TO IT.

ZOPESA will cure the worst case of Dyspepsia. A single dose will relieve in a degree that shows its wonderful curative powers and its peculiar action upon the stomach and digestive organs. THE NEW PATENT

DUST-PROOF

Stem Winding Open Face Case,

MANUFACTURED BY THE

AMERICAN WATCH CO.,
WALTHAM, MASS.

This case is formed in one solid piece without joint or seam, opening in front only, thus avoiding the usual way, and securing greater strength and durability.

These watches are all open face. The bezel, into which an extra strong crystal is fitted with an especially prepared water-proof cement, is attached to the case by screwing it thereon, and thus forms an air tight junction with the body of the case, which is proof against dust and moisture.

To railroad men, travelers, miners, lumbermen and others who are almost constantly exposed and who have to [illegible] those qualities are of the utmost importance.

The following letters tell their own story.

VALDOSTA, Georgia, July 20, 1882.

I sold one of your Patent Dust Proof Cases about ten months ago, and the other day it came back to me with the request to make it wind easier. On examination I found that the stem was rusty, and I inquired into the cause of it. The gentleman stated to me that he was starting some sawlogs that had lodged in the bend of the river, when his chain caught in a bush and threw his watch into about twelve feet of water, and he was about two hours finding it. When he got it out it was running and he thought all right. In about three months he found that the stem was hard to turn and sent it to me.

I can say that the watch is all that the company claims for it and recommend it to all railroad and mill men.

B. W. BENTLEY.

CLINTON, Iowa, April 29, 1881.

"I wish you would send me a spring for the Wm. Ellery Watch * * * By the way this Ellery is a watch I sold in your Screw Bezel Case to a farmer last fall. The first of January he lost the watch in the woods, and found it this week in about one foot of water. It had lain three months and over in snow and water, with but slight injury to the watch—only a hair-spring.

C. S. RAYMOND."

The above were very severe tests, and demonstrate beyond doubt, that for any reasonable length of time during which a watch might be under water it would receive no injury whatever.

We make these cases in both gold and silver, and as a Perfectly Dust-Proof Stem Winding Watch Case, Challenge the World to Produce its Equal.

WHY BOTHER WITH A RIDGLING

When his Value can be Doubled?

MR. J. W. LUCAS, of Battle Creek, Mich., pupil of the celebrated "Farmer" Miles, makes a specialty of Castrating stock and handles Ridglings with great success. His system is the only correct one, and injures the animal less than any other method. He is indorsed by the best horsemen in the country, as a safe and reliable operator. Parties can secure his services by forming a club. Will also spay domestic animals, and teach his patrons the art. Send for testimonials and descriptive circular. The above cut illustrates his method of securing the animal for operation, which effectually prevents injury to the animal by operator. Address, J. W. LUCAS, Battle Creek, Mich.

Minneapolis Harvester AND Twine Binder.

The only Binder Manufactured having

MR. APPLEBY'S Latest Improvements.

The record this popular binder made last season in Lenawee Co., is abundantly ample evidence to convince any farmer that this is the latest improved, easiest handled and by far the most perfect working Harvester and Binder in the market. Mr. J. F. Appleby, the inventor of the Appleby Binder superintends the construction of the Minneapolis, and with the improvements of 1883, especially the double packer trip, it is thoroughly adapted to the wants of the Michigan farmer, as there is a great variation in the size and condition of our grain the Binder can be moved instantly and easily, also the raising and lowering of the whole machine by the driver in his seat.

The machine has all the valuable points that any other has and many very vital points that no other machine has. Last season we sold 32 of these machines to some of the best farmers in this vicinity and we have a good testimonial from every one of them, besides others that own other binders that have seen the superior working of the Minneapolis acknowledge its superiority over all others. No other Binders ever sold in Lenawee Co. can produce such a record.

It is amazing what an amount of filth accumulates during a winter. The past winter there has been no thaw, and the whole season's accumulation is now being piled up and drawn from the streets. The amount exceeds all calculation.

There will be a stockholders' meeting of the Library Association at Heesen's Hall next Thursday evening, April 26th, at 7.30 P. M. A full attendance of the members is desired as an organization will be completed, officers elected, etc., at that time.

If the state law were enforced which declares that no one shall "swear, curse or profanely damn" on the streets or in any place of public resort, it would require a jail big enough to cover a ten-acre lot to hold the violators. If there is anything which will lower a man in the estimation of respectable people it is an outburst of vulgarity and profanity. The young man who flatters himself that it is smart is woefully mistaken. It is an evidence of ill breeding and want of self respect.

The Brearley White Mountain excursions which have given so many persons a chance to see the beautiful scenery of eastern America every summer for the past seven years offers this year a "side trip" to Europe. Two years ago Mr. Brearley, the able and gentlemanly manager of these excursions, offered free tickets on these trips to 100 Michigan editors, last year the Ohio editors received the benefit of this generous offer, and this year Indiana editors are invited to get their dusters and Panamas in readiness for a similar pleasure. Every one who has been on these excursions speaks highly of the pleasure of the trip and the excellant manner in which the excursions are managed.

The people down in Raisin are complaining about the stuff that is thrown in the river near Tecumseh, such as dead hogs, refuse from slaughter houses, old truck from grocery stores, &c. This garbage floats down the river and lodges along the banks, making not a very nice state of affairs for people who live along the river. Something should be done to put a stop to it.

E. G. Cook's residence was burglarized Tuesday night, and a gold watch and $4.00 in money were taken. Mr. Cook had received a large amount of money that day and some one probably anticipated a haul. But Cook is too good a business man to carry his money in his boot legs or stow it away in an old stocking in the bureau drawer. His money was in the bank.

Francis Voorhees, of Adrian, who died at his home in Adrian on Tuesday last, was 72 years old. He came to Michigan in 1837, locating first in Clinton, where he began the hat business, and he is thought to have been the first silk hat manufacturer in the state. In 1843 he removed to Adrian, where he has since lived. He was frequently an alderman, and at one time justice of the peace. During all his years in Michigan he was prominently identified with the M. E. church. He was the father of Dr. George V. Voorhees, of Coldwater, and Ellis D. Voorhees, a business man of Ionia.

Closing hymn.

The Dakota fever has grown to mammoth dimensions all over the State of Michigan, and right here we are not exempt from emigrants, who are looking toward the West. Even in southern Michigan, where there are as fine farms as anywhere in the world, men are giving them up and starting West. A good farm in southern or northern Michigan is good enough, if the people would but realize it. There will be lots of sick, poor people walking back from Dakota in the course of a couple of years.

Hillsdale Standard: "Colonel," the old army horse owned by the soldiers association of Hillsdale county and cared for by Wm. A. Petrie of Cambria, was in the city Wednesday, looking hale and hearty, coming through the winter in good order, appearing many years younger than last fall. The old fellow is the pride of every soldier in the county, as well as those who give him kind care, as is evidenced by his coltish pranks during the past winter and spring. His age being nearly thirty years, he bids fair to stay with his comrades many years more.

L. C. Miller, of Howell, was in town three or four days last week on business. He returned about the first of the month from Dakota where he invested in a tract of land containing a large marble quarry. He and a business partner purchased about five hundred acres of land. (The statement in last week's HERALD being somewhat incorrect.) Mr. Miller was feeling quite elated over his purchase as he feels very sanguine that he has "struck it rich." We congratulate him upon his good fortune, and hope that his expectations may be fully realized.

A MINISTERIAL PROMOTION.

Rev. R. S. Pardington has been transferred to the East New York Conference, and assigned to the first M. E. church of Hartford, Conn. Bro. Pardington has labored in the Detroit Conference just twenty-five years, and this is the third year of his connection with the Tecumseh church. It is no disparagement to his predecessors in the Methodist church in this village to say that in pastoral fidelity, pulpit ability and general adaptedness to his sacred calling, he surpasses them all. His success in Tecumseh has been marked and enduring. We regret exceedingly to lose him as a resident, but at the same time heartily congratulate him upon his deserved promotion. We can commend him to the Hartford church as a minister eminently qualified to acceptably fill any position to which the church authorities may assign him. He will hold his farewell services in the church here next Sunday, and will take his departure early next week to his new field of labor.

COUNTY CONDENSATIONS.

Hudson has 48 pathmasters.

The county jail has been repainted.

Next examination of teachers will be in Morenci, April 21.

More men and teams are wanted on the line of the M. & O. railroad.

Wheeler's Rambles failed to draw a paying house at Clinton last week.

Fred Sherwood has been appointed marshal of Clinton for the coming year.

The wheelbarrow works at Hudson shipped 600 wheelbarrows to Lansing last week.

Blissfield like Tecumseh polled exactly 40 prohibition votes at the late election.

The South Eastern Michigan Beekeepers' Association met at Adrian yesterday.

Adrian brick and tile machine company are looking for a new site on which to rebuild their works.

W. F. Hood & Co., of Deerfield, who were burned out recently, are again in the field with a fresh stock.

Joe Grandy lately returned to Fairfield and made a present of the measles to twenty-two of his friends.

It is reported that the farmers of Medina are paying their hands from $18 to $25 per month this season.

The township of Clinton offers a bounty of ten cents per head for woodchucks killed in said township.

Jacob Rorick of Seneca, last year received for the milk of six cows $431.30 in cash, beside what his family used.

Mrs. Garrett F. Harris, of Woodstock, aged 63 years, has just completed a rug which contains 8760 different pieces.

One hundred and forty cars loads of freight have been shipped by W. H. Higby from Ogden station during the past six months.

Mrs. Powell, of Seneca, now 103 yrs. of age, is in quite feeble health, and fears are entertained that she may yet pass away of old age.

The annual election of officers of the Clinton Woolen Manufacturing Co. took place last week and resulted in the re-election of the old board.

Adrian Press: James Moir was on all three of the tickets for the office of constable in Tecumseh. That's Moir endorsement than usually falls to a constable.

There is not a well defined temperance society in the town of Fairfield, and the town has gone Democratic.—Something out to be done immediately about it.

W. A. Whitney, formerly of the Adrian Press, but lately of Detroit, has again located at Adrian being installed as principal clerk at the Lawrence house, in place of his son Dwight who goes to Detroit.

Hudson Gazette: The committee of the Agricultural society are greatly inclined to hold the next county fair at either Tecumseh or Morenci; but have resolved to give Adrian another chance to bid for the show.

Mrs. Minnie Munster, of Riga, was arrested for assault and battery on the 5th inst., upon the person of her mother-in-law. Before Justice McCann she pleaded guilty and was fined $10 and costs, which she paid.

Adrian Record: Fourteen Morenci girls attended the teachers' examination at Adrian, and only three got certificates. The eleven "foolish virgins," are now talking of sewing the inspectors up in a sheet, and whipping them to death.

A bill to amend sections six and seven of Act No. 279, session laws of 1875, entitled "An act to incorporate the village of Blissfield, Lenawee county, Michigan," was passed by the Senate last week. The bill was ordered to take immediate effect.

Hudson Gazette: "We hear a report that Clayton people are moving for a new town, to comprise the east half of Hudson and two miles off of Dover. That would give the new town a central village, Clayton, a la the new towns of Clinton and Deerfield. It is a question for the board of supervisors.

Hudson Post: A twelve-year-old boy in Wheatland was taken violently ill with the stomach-ache one day last week. Remedies were at once applied, and when the patient was partially relieved he was asked what the cause of the difficulty was. He said he had been trying to eat enough to make himself pussy, so that when he grew up to be a man he might be township treasurer like Uncle Jim Dillon.

Clinton News: Clarence Smith, a nephew of A. G. Burton of this place, was killed in Chicago by an engine last Monday. He was fireman on an engine belonging to the Michigan Central railroad at work in the yard at Chicago and left his engine a moment and went into a passenger car to get a drink of water. On stepping from the car he was struck by a passing engine which he did not see, and both legs were cut off. He lived but a short time.

The Cleveland Plaindealer says of the John Thompson entertainment which is to be given at the Opera House to-morrow evening the following: "The doctors say a hearty laugh is more desirable for mental health than any exercise of the reasoning faculties, and if a joyous smile adds an hour to one's life, a heartfelt laugh should add a day. To witness John Thompson, the comedian, in his fabulous moreau, entitled "Around the World," caught, surely to prolong one's life a year. His wit, humor and comicalities have the same effect upon a melancholy person that fire has in a damp house, dispersing chills and drying molds and making all hospitable and cheerful. We don't remember of seeing a comedian of the Thompson type, so grotesque, so ridiculous, and yet so finished. In "Around the World" there is no murder, robbery, abduction, villians or villainy; no love making or sickly emotional scenes—it is pure, wholesome, unadulterated fun; it is just the kind of an entertainment a man can take his family to and enjoy."

The next meeting of the Lenawee Co. Teachers' Association will be held at Adrian on Saturday, April 28th, inst. The program will be announced at an early day. An interesting session is anticipated. All the live teachers in the county are earnestly requested to be present.

Frank Darling has been in Woodstock and Cambridge two days this week, and while there he took a large number of additional shares in our Fair Association.

Dr. Rush's Medical Association:

Dear Doctors—The three bottles of Dr. Rush's Specific I ordered were received by express last week. I have taken nearly one bottle, and am highly satisfied with the result. For over two years I have been troubled with sharp pain at my left side, which, upon examination, proved to be an enlargement of the heart, and was unable to give me any relief. The trouble grew worse, and I became convinced that I could not live. While in New York City, last week, I called on one of the most prominent physicians there, who charged me $25 for an examination and then recommended your "Regulator." Knowing you to be a regular Medical Association, and not a patent medicine scheme, I ordered the three bottles. I have not been troubled since I commenced taking it, but shall continue and take the entire three bottles so as to obtain a permanent cure. You have my sincere thanks. I am, gentlemen,

Very respectfully,

Cured of Rheumatism in Two Hours.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 2, 1882.

Dr. Rush's Medical Association

Gentlemen—I have been troubled with rheumatism for two years. I tried all the best advertised oils and liniments, and many first-class physicians without relief. The last Doctor I visited recommended "Dr. Rush's Blood Root Oil." I purchased a large bottle for fifty cents and applied it. In two hours I was relieved, and now am entirely well. Its effects are wonderful, and I believe it the only thing in the world which will cure rheumatism.

Truly yours,

Rheumatism.

Common rheumatism is a disease which affects the joints, the hinges of the body, in such a way that the slightest motion of the ailing part gives pain. A creaking hinge is dry and turns hard. A single drop of oil to moisten it makes a wonderful change, and it instantly moves on itself with the utmost ease. All kinds of rheumatism are an inflammation of the surface of the joints. Inflammation is heat; this heat dries their surfaces; hence the very slightest effort at motion gives piercing pain. In a healthy condition of the parts nature is constantly throwing out lubricating oil which keeps the joints in a perfectly smooth and easy working condition. Rheumatism is almost always caused by cold. It may be laid down as a general fact that it is always the result of a cold dampness. A dry cold or warm dampness does not induce rheumatism.

A garment, wetted by perspiration or rain, or water in any form, about the joints and allowed to dry while the person is in a state of rest, is the most common way of causing rheumatism. A partially wetting is as bad if the entire clothing were wetted, because in the latter case it would be certainly and speedily exchanged for dry garments. There are two very certain methods of preventing rheumatism. The moment a garment is wetted, in whole or in part, change it or keep in motion sufficient to maintain a very slight perspiration until the clothing is perfectly dry.

The failure to wear woolen flannel next the skin is the most frequent cause of rheumatism; for a common muslin or linen or silk shirt by perspiration becomes damp and cold the instant a puff of air strikes it, even in mid-summer. This is not the case where woolen flannel is worn next the skin.

The easiest, most certain and least hurtful way of curing this troublesome affection is first, to keep the joint affected wound around with several folds of woolen flannel; live entirely on the lightest kind of food, such as coarse breads, ripe fruits, berries, boiled turnips, stewed apples and the like. If such things were taken to the extent of keeping the system freely open, and exercise was taken, so that a slight moisture should be on the skin all the time, or if in bed the same thing were accomplished by hot teas and plenty of bed-clothing, a grateful relief and an ultimate cure will very certainly result in a very short time. Without this soft and moist condition of the skin and an open state of the system, the disease will continue to torture for weeks and months and years. Inflammatory rheumatism may, for all practical purposes, be regarded as an aggravated form of a common kind, extending to all joints of the body instead of implicating only one or two. For all kinds, time, flannel and warmth, with a light and cooling diet, are the great remedies.—Hall's Journal of Health.

"Pure Mocha."

A DELUDED PUBLIC [illegible] OF COFFEE WILL DO NOT [illegible].

If the official reports of the coffee trade are to be trusted [illegible] probably it may not greatly interest the coffee consumer of this country has been for long time past very much [illegible]. There are a multitude of people in this part of the world who are laboring under the belief that the beverage which they drink at breakfast, and, possibly at dinner, is Mocha coffee. Their grocer tells them that the article he sells is "pure Mocha," and they have no means of knowing that he is [illegible] them, if [illegible], he has not been deceive himself. Some, with a peculiar distinctiveness, insist upon having a mixture, and want one-half or one-third of Mocha and the remainder of Java coffee—a request which the grocer seemingly complies with; that is, he takes the coffee from two separate compartments. Now, the last completed returns of the coffee production of the world are made up to the year 18[illegible] in that year the estimated growth was [illegible] 2,112,000 pounds of which Brazil produced [illegible] 107,127,300 pounds, or nearly one-half. Next came the Dutch East Indian possessions, where the crop amounted to 2[illegible] 200 pounds; while Ceylon, South America and the West Indies furnished nearly [illegible] of the rest. Arabia, it is true, appears [illegible] the list, but its total growth, the Mocha [illegible] and the rest of the country combined, was only about 1,500,000 pounds—[illegible] less than a quarter of 1 per cent. of the crop of the world.

When it is considered [illegible] extensively used in Arabia, and [illegible] within the possessions [illegible] peopled with [illegible] have no direct commerce [illegible] one may well [illegible] the current Mocha [illegible] It is highly probable [illegible] of this article are [illegible] in the course of a [illegible] would not further [illegible] inhabitants of the [illegible] know the flavor of [illegible] can not be deceived [illegible] probably not one in [illegible] tasted it.—N. Y. [illegible]

The Ram at Church.

Mollie had a little ram, fleece black as rubber shoe, and everywhere that Mollie went he congregated to.

He went with her to church one day—the folks in it rose to greet him as he walked testatorily into Deacon Allen's pew!

The worthy deacon quickly [illegible] his angry passions rose, and gave it an unchristian kick between the sad brown eyes.

This kind Providence in the form of the deacon's flowed fast, and raised his foot again, but didn't that ram kick warm his fleece!

For Mr. [illegible] slow back about [illegible] the sermon could [illegible] it stood him on his head.

Congregation [illegible] and went to [illegible] sheep, but several were directed [illegible] pitched them in a heap.

[illegible] rushed the straightway for the [illegible] with curses long and loud, while ram [illegible] struck the hindmost man and shothim through the crowd.

The minister had often heard that kindness would subdue the fiercest beast—"Ah!" then he said, "I'll try that game on you."

He led so he kindly, mildly called, "Come [illegible], rammy, ram; to see the folks abuse you so, I grieved and sorry am."

With kind and gentle words he came too—that tall pulpit down, saying rammy, rammy, ram; ram, rammy, rammy, rammy, ram—best sheep in the town.

The ram looked meek, and on he came, with "rammy, rammy, ram; ram, rammy, rammy, rammy, ram, the meekest ram."

The ram quite dropped its humble air, and rose from off his feet, and when the person hit he lay beneath the hindmost seat.

As he shot out the open door, and closed it with a slam, he named a California town, I think 'twas "Yuba Dam!"—Modern Argosy.

Tom Hughes on American Tree-Cutting.

There are few more interesting experiences than a ride through these Southern forests. The scrub is so low and thin that you can almost see away for long distances amongst pine, white oak, and chestnut trees, and every now and then at ridges where the timber is thin, or where a clump of trees has been ruthlessly "girdled," and the bare gaunt skeletons only remain standing, you may catch glimpses of mountain ranges of different shades of blue and green, stretching far away to the horizon. You can travel many days up there without getting to love the trees as friends, I think, that we do in well-kept England, and this outrage of girdling, as every yeoman knows, by stripping the bark from the lower part of the trunk, so that the trees wither and die as they stand, strikes one as a kind of household cruelty, as if a man could cut off or destroy all his wife's hair. If he wants a tree for timber or firewood, very good. He should have it. But he should cut it down like a man and take it clean away for some reasonable use, not leave it [illegible] and [illegible]. Happily, not much [illegible] of this kind has been done yet in the neighborhood of Rugby, and a stop will now be put to the wretched practice.

There is another, too, almost as ghastly, but which, no doubt, has more to be said for it. At least half the largest pines alongside of the sandy tracts which do duty for roads have a long, gaping wound in their sides, about a yard from the ground. This was the native way of collecting turpentine, which oozed down and accumulated at the bottom of the gash; but I rejoice to say it no longer pays, and the custom is in disuse. It must be suppressed altogether, but carefully and gently. It seems that if not persisted in too long, the poor, dear long-suffering trees will close up their wounds, and not be much the worse; so I trust that many of the scored pines springing forty or fifty feet in the air before throwing out a branch, which I passed in sorrow and anger on my first long ride, may yet outlive those who outraged them. Having got rid of my spleen, excited by these two diabolic customs, I can return to our ride, which had otherwise nothing but delight in it.—London Spectator.

How Fowls Grind Their Food.

Fowls have no teeth to grind or masticate their food with, and the best they are able to do with it is to pick it and swallow it whole. Kernels of grain are swallowed by them, and as they are surrounded by a tough pellicle or skin, which the juice of the stomach of the animals will not readily dissolve or digest, they could obtain no nourishment at all from the grain if this tough pellicle was not broken. Now, if we dissect the gizzard of a fowl of any kind, we have a lot of small gravel stones, which are usually the hardest kind of flint, granite or sandstone. Surely here is a pocket edition of farm grist mills.

Fowls swallow their food, broken or not, and it enters the crop or first stomach and remains in it until it has become softened more or less, when a small quantity at a time, just as grain runs into a grist mill, is forced into the gizzard among the gravel stones. This gizzard is a strong, muscular stomach, and plays night and day when there is grist to grind, similar to a bellows, contracting and expanding, thus forcing the gravel stones into the grain and breaking it into fragments and triturating the whole mass, after which it is in a suitable condition to be quickly digested.

FITS

A Leading London Physician establishes an Office in New York for the Cure of EPILEPTIC FITS.

From Am. Journal of Medicine.

Dr. Ab. Meserole (late of London), who makes a specialty of Epilepsy, has without doubt treated and cured more cases than any other living physician. His success has simply been astonishing; we have heard of cases of over 20 years' standing successfully cured by him. He has published a work on this disease, which he sends with a large bottle of his wonderful cure free to any sufferer who may send their express and P. O. Address. We advise any one wishing a cure to address

DANIEL F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

A Common-sense Remedy.

SALICYLICA.

No More Rheumatism, Gout or Neuralgia.

Immediate Relief Warranted.
Permanent Cure Guaranteed.

Five years established and never known to fail in a single case, acute or chronic. Refer to all prominent physicians and druggists for the standing of Salicylica.

SECRETS.

THE ONLY DISCOVERY OF THE CONSCIOUS ERIC ACID WHICH EXISTS IN THE BLOOD OF RHEUMATIC AND GOUTY PATIENTS.

SALICYLICA is known as a common-sense remedy, because it strikes directly at the cause of Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia, while so many so-called specifics and supposed panaceas only treat the effects.

It has been conceded by original scientists that outward applications, such as rubbing with oils, ointments, liniments and soothing lotions will not eradicate these diseases which are the result of the poisoning of the blood with Uric Acid.

SALICYLICA works with marvelous effect on this acid and so removes the disorder. It is now exclusively used by all celebrated physicians of America and Europe. Highest Medical Academy of Paris reports 95 per cent. cures in three days.

REMEMBER

that SALICYLICA is a certain cure for Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia. The most intense pains are subdued almost instantly.

Give it a trial. Relief guaranteed or money refunded.

Thousands of testimonials sent on application.

$1 a Box, 6 Boxes for $5.

Sent free by mail on receipt of money. Ask your druggist for it.

But do not be deluded into taking imitations or substitutes, or something recommended as "just as good." Insist on the genuine with the name of Washburne & Co., on each box, which is guaranteed chemically pure and* our signature, an indispensible requisite to insure success in the treatment. Take no other, or send to us.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Necessitating a Surgical Operation—Loving Mother Attempts to Take a Pair of Shears from Her Child. PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner, of South Roundout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could; but intensly painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successfur operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But owing to pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by our druggists at one dollar a bottle.

OF ANOTHER AGE.

Gradually supplanted by a Better Article, Certain old Things are Done Away.

In the general reception room of the Western Union Telegraph building on Broadway, New York, are exhibited the coarse, crude and clumsy instruments of the infancy of the telegraph. They are only relics now. More perfect machinery has superseded them.

Years ago what is now styled the old-fashioned porous plaster did some good service. There was then nothing better of the kind. Now all that is changed. Science and study has gone deeper into the secrets of the medicine and produced BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER, which embodies all the excellencies thus far possible in an external remedy. The old plasters were slow—the Capcine is rapid; they were uncertain—the Capcine is sure. Cheaper articles bear similar names. Be cur ful, therefore, that some thrifty druggist does not deceive you. In the center of the genuine is cut the word CAPCINE. Price 25c. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again, I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you.

The Old Blue Chest.

One day recently five or six women with serious faces were gathered in a room in a house on Front street east. For two years a poor old woman had lived there, not exactly a beggar nor an object of charity, but certainly in want. She had a husband when she first moved there, a poor old man whose days could not be long; but one day he was missing. He may have fallen into the river, or he may have wandered out into the country and died. This left the old woman alone, and there were days and days in which no one went near her or addressed her. When she felt the chill of death approaching she wanted some one with her. She had lived alone, but she could not die that way. She went where tender hands clasped hers and kind voices addressed her. Death had already placed its mark on her face, and the women could do nothing. While their tears fell upon her wrinkled hands she passed away in a child's sleep.

There was not little in the room beyond an old blue chest—battered and bruised and splintered, but yet holding together. It had seen strange times, that old blue chest. It had held silks and broadcloths perhaps—it had surely held rags. It had been moved from house to house and from town to town. It had listened to laughter and had heard sobs and moans. It grew old no faster than the old woman whose hands had so often lifted its lid. It had doubtless kept the company of good carpets and furniture and crockery, and laughing romping children had climbed over it or hidden in it. It had faded, and its hinges were rusty and weak, but it had outlived its owner.

The women looked about for garments in which to enshroud the dead. Nothing was in sight. One of them lifted the lid of the old blue chest, and called the other to help her drag it from the corner. It held treasure—such treasure as men could not buy nor poverty steal away. There was a dress of fine material, cut after a fashion of long ago. For twenty years the chest had been its guardian. It would have sold for a few dollars, but though the gnawings of hunger had come often and the cold had fought its way to her marrow, that poor old woman could not part with that relic of better days. It may have been a link to connect her with love and wealth. Beneath it was a relic still more priceless. Carefully wraped in a piece of paper was a silver dime more than fifty years old. A child, dead in its young years, had worn that dime around its neck as a gift or talisman. There was a child's mitten, stained and worn, but a mitten knit by a proud young mother for her child. It could not speak to tell the dim past, but it had power. As the women saw it they covered their faces with their aprons and wept.

There was a boy's cap and a girl's hat, both so faded and time-eaten that they had to be tenderly handled. The women looked from them to the poor old white face on the bed and whispered;

"None but a good mother would have treasured these relics. She was old and poor, but her heart was pure."

Deeper down as if to battle the search of Time itself, was a familiar toy—a child's dumb watch. Hands were broken and gone, face scratched and case battered, but the woman handled it as if a touch would shatter it. There was a doll's head, a boy's fish-line, some toy chairs, a yarn ball, and other things to show that in the long ago that dead woman had felt the kisses of children, heard their "good-night," and thanked God that she was blessed. Each relic was wept over—each was replaced with fresh tear-stains. They asked the old blue chest no questions. Its relics might have been voiceless to a man, but to a woman and mother each one had a tale in words as plain as print. They shed more tears as they again bent over the poor old dead, and they said to each other:

"If she had only told us, how we would have loved her and sought to lighten her sorrows."

But she had gone as she had come, a mystery, and but for the old blue chest in the corner few would have cared, and none would have sorrowed.—Detroit Free Press.

The "Jim-Jams."

Delirium tremens! Snakes! Jim-Jams! Yes I've had touches of them. You want to know how it feels? I'll tell you. You have drank maybe a week, maybe more. At last liquor ceases to excite, brace, up or tranquillize. You drink half a pint of brandy and it has no more effect then so much water. Then you are close to the horrors. Food won't help you. Your stomach rejects it. Now your punishment commences. You can't sleep. You [illegible] so wear, but there is no rest. You are tired of thinking, yet the tired brain will think. You lie down, drop into a doze for a moment and wake up with a shock as if touched with an electric wire. You are covered with perspiration. You get up and walk the room, walk the streets—walk, walk, walk, and then fling yourself down, praying for ever so few minutes sleep. All this for days with people about you, and through nights. But no Chinese torturer employed in keeping some miserable criminal awake till he dies was ever more full of relentless vigilance than your abused nerves. Dreads indescribable seize upon you. Your hands have a sensation of being of enormous size. They do not look it. They feel it. Your head in the manner feels as if enormously puffed out. Then your breath comes spasmodically, hot flushes strike the heart, all the blood seems at times to rush in that direction, and you fight aimlessly for life and expect to fall dead. This is the commencement of the horrors. Now you are fixed for seeing rats and snakes and vermin.

Caring for the Feet.

There is no part of the human body that needs more attention than the feet. They may be neglected or even abused without any bad consequences being immediately felt; they will to a certainty be eventually felt, and felt very sorely too. An excessive flow of blood to the head, extreme liability to cold, disordered digestion and other numerous evils are the results of inattention to the feet. The feet should be regularly washed and wiped every day. Stockings should not be put on while there is the slightest moisture on the feet. The stockings absorb the moisture, and gradually return it to the feet, thereby causing them to feel cold and uncomfortable, and what is worse, when the feet are cold, the circulation is interfered with, and the whole system, especially the brain, is thrown into an abnormal state. Keep the feet clean and warm, the head cool and the bowels open. If you wish to preserve your whole system in good working order, be sure and preserve your feet. Let all our readers profit by these remarks, and they will soon feel by experience that we are not exagerating the consequences of proper attention to the feet.

THE AMERICAN IRON TRADE.—According to the report of the secretary of the Iron and Steel Association, the American iron trade for the year 1880 was quite active and satisfactory. The United States made in that year, 3,900,000 gross tons of pig iron, as against 2,741,853 tons in 1879. These figures indicate a consumption of about 4,000,000 tons in 1880. The production of rails is estimated at 1,200,000 gross tons as against 866,964 tons in 1879. Of the total for 1880, 775,000 tons were steel rails and 425,000 iron. The consumption was approximately 1,617,000 tons.

The year 1880 witnessed a revival in the extension of our railway system—the amount of new track laid being estimated at about 6,000 miles, as against 4,725 miles in 1879. The figures of this year are, with the single exception, the largest in the history of railways in this country.

RESCED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: In the fall of 1876, I was taken with bedding of lungs followed by a severe cogh. I lost my appetite and flesh and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the Hospital. The docto said I had a hole in my lung as bigs a half dollar. At one time a rept went around that I was dead. I got up hope, but a friend told me of Dr. William Hall's Balsam For The Lungs. I got a bottle when to my surprise, commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years pa.

NOTICE. I am requested by the Commissioner of the Village of Tecumseh to have posted the state law and the corporation law relative to special school districts, showing on the last, inside the corporation, and upon which officers are committed to enforce the law for the suppression of the same.

H. W. STEVENS,
Marshall.

Following is the law of State and Corporation.

[No. 166.]

AN ACT to prevent hunting for game with firearms, dogs, or otherwise on any enclosed lands or premises of another in this state without the consent of the owner or lessee of such lands or premises.

SECTION 1. The People of the State of Michigan enact, That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to hunt for game with firearms, dogs, or otherwise, on any inclosed lands or premises of another in any county of this State without the consent of the owner or lessee of such lands or premises.

SEC. 2. Any person or persons violating the provisions of the foregoing section of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine not less than five nor more than twenty dollars, in the discretion of the court, and costs of prosecution. And in case the fine imposed and the costs of prosecution shall not be paid, the defendant shall be confined in the county jail of the county not less than five nor more than thirty days. Provided, however, That no complaint shall be entertained against any person for the violation of any of the provisions of this act unless the same shall be made by the owner or lessee of the land or premises so trespassed against upon.

Approved May 23, 1877.

CHAPTER VII.

SEC. 7. No person shall fire any gun, pistol, or cannon, within the business portion of said village, nor fire any gun, pistol or cannon in or across any street, alley or lot in said village, nor fire any gun, pistol or cannon in any portion of said village calculated, or having a tendency to endanger, injure or put persons in fear, without the consent of the council, under a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars, in the discretion of the court; but nothing in this section contained shall be construed to prohibit any military company, existing under provisions of law, from firing any gun or cannon when authorized by their commanding officer.

AN OATH.

CRAWFORD CO., PA., CITY OF TITUSVILLE.

Personally appeared before me Peter Phillips, who, being sworn according to law, deposes and says: That he has been afflicted with Rheumatism, more or less, for the past four or five years. That last winter he had a very severe attack, and that the pain was excruciating, and he could only move about in his own room by taking hold of something for support. When the disease was in its most acute form, and the pain almost unbearable, he took a dose of Wilson's Lightning Remedy, which caused immediate relief, and the second dose, taken five hours after, made a perfect and permanent cure, and that since taking the two doses he has been free from the disease, or any symptoms thereof.

Supervisor Palmer has his assessment nearly made.

Charles Underwood raised a barn last Saturday.

Social next Friday evening at Mr. [illegible]'s.

D. M. Heath now occupies part of Loren Allen's house.

Harry Smith has moved in with Aunt Lydia.

Jonathan Hall died early Monday morning, aged 82 years. He was one of the earliest residents of this township, having lived here over fifty years. The funeral services were held at the house on Wednesday, at one o'clock, after which the remains were interred in the Kelly cemetery in Raisin.

John Exelby's meat market opened Monday. He runs Joe Wooden's wagon and promises to make the village every Monday, Wednesday and Friday. All right John.

Mrs. Sam. Fletcher died suddenly last week, only being sick a day or two. The funeral services were held on Friday afternoon.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

Orange blossoms April 17. At the residence of the bride's parents at Deerfield, Mr. R. Dibble of Ridgeway, and Miss Clara Bragg, of Deerfield.

Last Saturday the people of Holloway were startled by the alarm of fire, which was discovered to be issuing from the roof of the molding room of the foundry. But through the efforts of the employees it was soon extinguished. We hope it will be a warning to the proprietors to be more careful in the future.

Last Friday a little three year old child of Dan Coffin's drank some strong lye, but fortunately drank only enough to make his mouth and tong badly inflamed and swollen.

Mr. Wm. Doty, who has been seriously ill, is rapidly improving under the care of Dr. Begle.

B. Kelly & Co., shipped a car load of hogs and cattle Monday.

Mrs. M. J. Satterthwaite, who for some time has been suffering from heart disease, had a relapse Sunday. At latest reports she is improving.

Tally one for Jacob Wright—a boy.

Mr. Allen Hoxie, of the firm of B. Kelly & Co., started Tuesday for Battle Creek on a business trip.

Mr. Floyd Florence expects soon to move on a farm near Ridgeway village.

RAILROAD WAR.

A Hot Time at Addison—The Laborers on the M. & O. Road Strike and Will Not Permit New Men To Work.

Last week a company of Polack laborers to the number of over one hundred, who had been working for the M. & O. road near Addison struck for higher wages. New hands were hired and when they attempted to work last Saturday the strikers would interfere and prevent. "John, No. 28," the leader of the gang, was arrested, and upon learning of this the Polacks were furious and threatened to march on Adrian and clean out the jail. Sheriff Bidwell went to Adrian Saturday afternoon, and the Adrian military company were called together on Sunday evening expecting an order at any moment to march to Addison. Their services however were not called for.

C. A. King & Co. of Toledo have received over 1,300 reports covering every important wheat growing county in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Kansas, and Missouri. One quarter report the present condition very favorable, one-quarter fair, one third poor, one sixth very poor. One quarter report the present condition as much better than two weeks ago, one half report it slightly better, one sixth about the same, one twelfth worse, one sixth say better than a year ago, one quarter say as good, nearly half report is worse, and one sixth say much worse than a year ago. The season is backward, acreage and reserves about the same as the corresponding last year.

Geo. W. Smith and Frank Tucker of Mt. Clemens, shot a beautiful white swan last week. It weighed 15 pounds and measured seven feet six inches from tip to tip of wings and five feet from head to tail. It will be fitted up by a taxidermist and placed in the rooms of the Audubon club.

Maple sugar weighted with plaster has again made its appearance in some portions of the state. In St. Joseph a table-spoonful of plaster was taken from a saucer full of maple syrup. There is a penalty attached to such business and the man who sold the sugar may be made to suffer for it.

LOCAL ADVERTISING.

The value of advertising is of more consequence in a general ways than it is often credited with. A too contracted view is so frequently thrown around its salutary influences, that those who read a business card, seem to think that it is upon it of the largest consequence to any one but the advertiser. This however is a great mistake, for the community at large is benefited, according to our way of thinking, by every business card of a town store appearing in the town papers. It needs no very skillful reasoning to elucidate the proposition, for there can be no better method adopted to improve a village, town or city, than that which keeps the bulk of trade at home. By so doing, the results of industry are widely diffused in the expenditures made, society becomes co-operative to a considerable extent, material improvements are encouraged and pride of place is fostered. Our live store keepers are beginning to understand the value of advertising, and our residents fail not to reward them for their enterprise. A contemporary puts the matter in this wise:

"When the business men of a town fail to advertise extensively they diminish the importance and trade of the place, and permit more enterprising localities to take the latter from them. Although done for their individual interests, advertisers should be looked on by citizens of the town where they reside, as in some sense public benefactors, and they should be encouraged accordingly. One merchant who advertises extensively is worth to his own town and its people more than forty that never show themselves in print, and should be, for this reason, alone preferred, assuming that he is of course, a fair business man."

A touching incident is related of Prof. Cocker, of Michigan university, whose decease was noticed in the News of last Monday. Shortly before his death, he called the attention of his pastor to a worn and faded shawl, spread on his bed, and requested to have it wrapped around his body and buried with him. He had made it himself when a young man in England, had worn it in all his journeyings to and fro over the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans; when residing in Australia; when he escaped from the Fiji islanders as they were preparing to kill and roast him, and when he was shipwrecked. It accompanied him when he landed in the United States, and even clad the remains of his dead child, when penniless and disheartened, he first arrived in Adrian. No wonder he desired it should enshroud his inanimate body and accompany him into the quiet grave. His wish was gratified.—Detroit News.

RAILROAD NOTES.

Battle Creek Republican: Mr. Howard, of the construction firm of Brown, Howard & Co., J. A. Latcha, chief engineer; Col. Neal and Sylvester Lamb, have been on a tour of inspection over the M. & O. They went over the line on their own train from Allegan to Yorkville, and from thence to Battle Creek by wagon. Their object was to ascertain just what had been done, and how to organize forces to hurry up the work.

The Cadillac News says: The Dakota fever has grown to mammoth dimensions all over the state of Michigan, and right here we are not exempt from emigrants who are looking toward the west. Even in southern Michigan, where there are as fine farms as anywhere in the world, men are giving them up and starting west. A good farm in southern or northern Michigan is good enough, if the people would but realize it. There will be lots of sick, poor people walking back from Dakota in the course of a couple of years.

The third annual shearing of the Ridgeway sheep breeders and wool growers will be held at the residence of J. Britton, Britton station, Wednesday, May 2d. You are respectfully invited to attend.

WM. BRITTON, Sec'y.

COUNTY CONDENSATIONS.

E. D. Silvers, of Clinton, has moved to Pittsford.

A new grange has been organized at Ogden Center.

Jasper has a new doctor and he has lots of business.

The Hudson Sanitarium is in a prosperous condition.

The Clinton Baptist church holds mush and milk socials.

Baker's cheese factory at Fairfield is now in running order.

Adrian has a new Sunday paper called the "Sunday Herald."

There are 70 cases of measles in Fairfield and more in prospect.

Ridgeway is putting on city airs. The town has two township clerks.

The Franklin sheep shearing festival will be held to-morrow, April 27.

The Addison creamery has got started and is doing a good business.

The village authorities of Morenci have invested in a new road scraper.

The Lake Shore water tank west of Dundee burned down a few days ago.

Cambridge pays 20 cents each for woodchuck scalps taken in that town.

The Cambridge sheep shearing festival will be held on Wednesday, May 2nd.

The main street of Blissfield is in bad condition from lack of proper drainage.

The common council of Deerfield will probably establish fire limits in that village.

E. A. Burton and D. F. Griswold will erect a new brick block in Deerfield this summer.

Prof. E. G. Walker, of the Board of Examiners for this county, is quite sick with gastric fever.

The county fair will remain in Adrian and will be held on Lawrence Park, upon Sept. 25, 26, 27 and 28.

The Adrian water works have been located in the southern part of the city. Wells will be sunk to furnish a water supply.

A Dover plow team ran away in the field the other day, but when one stumbled and broke his neck the runaway fun was spoiled.

Theron Fisk, of Clinton, returned from Dakota last week. He says the mud there is ten feet deep, to say nothing of other attractions, for new settlers.

Morenci Observer: The old pioneer "Uncle Bill" Sutton says that some of the Dakota emigrants from this vicinity took more things with them then was possessed by all the settlers of Seneca, when he came here in 1835.

Adrian Press: College students complain of the bad sidewalks between the college and the city. The walks are pretty tolerably well busted, but not so bad that the Ohio and Pennsylvania youth couldn't hobble over them to the polls and put in an illegal ballot, just as well as not.

Blissfield Advance: A young son of Conrad Ackley was arrested Tuesday evening by Constable Harrington charged with stealing a watch from the shop of Williams & Bacon. He staid in the "cooler" until Wednesday morning, when 'Squire McCann fined him $5 and costs, which his father paid. The watch was also recovered.

Morenci Observer: Hon. A. L. Millard, of Adrian, and our village attorney, Mr. Morgan, both concur in their opinion that under our village charter it would be illegal to issue bonds for the purpose of building a village hall; nevertheless it is thought by those competent to judge, that sufficient can be raised for the purpose if our board of trustees chose to use the maximum of money raising power granted in the charter. Whether they will do it or not remains to be seen.

Hudson Gazette: Lenawee representatives have not been idle at Lansing. Mr. Bixby has endeavored to break up the system of free R. R. tickets to members of the legislature, State officers and judges, and also introduced a joint resolution giving power to the Governor to object to particular items of appropriations in any bill. Mr. Howell is the author of a bill to prevent the practice of medicine or surgery by incompetent persons. Mr. Harkness is to be credited with a measure making it unlawful for the authorities of one town or city to shift paupers or destitute persons upon another town or city for their care and protection. Mr. Harkness has rather outstripped his colleagues by being able to report to the legislature an increase in the census of his own household. Altogether the Lenawee members are an active lot.

MICHIGAN STATE ITEMS.

Oakland county will hold sheep shearing and exhibit at Milford, May 1.

Henry Tool, of Fernwell, Calhoun co., broke his leg by falling from a wagon.

John J. Snodgrass, one of the oldest pioneers of Wheatland, Hillsdale co., is dead aged 89.

Annual session of the state medical society will be held at Kalamazoo, May 8.

Julia A. Moore, the sweet singer of Michigan, owns stock in a Grand Rapids national bank.

Belleville, Wayne Co., will be connected with Ypsilanti by telephone this week.

The United States express company's safe at Ida was cracked last week, and $40 secured.

M. Hinckley & Co's stave and heading mill burned last Saturday; loss $3,000 to $5,000, no insurance.

John H. Robinson, proprietor of the flouring mill at Pewamo, Ionia co., fell from a load of wheat, last Thursday and was severely hurt.

Mrs. R. Emerson, living four miles north of Big Rapids, committed suicide last Thursday by shooting herself through the head. Age 52 years.

Work on the new court house at Charlotte will be commenced this week, and under the contract every thing must be completed by October, 1884.

Every brakeman on the Grand Trunk road is now furnished a stick from the general office at Battle Creek with which to couple cars, the sticks being made expressly for that purpose.

Mr. and Mrs. Amos Davis, of Birmingham, celebrated the 60th anniversary of their wedding on Sunday, of last week. They came to Michigan from Cortland county, N. Y., 57 years ago.

Joe Youngs, of Bedford, Calhoun county, was caught by a revolving shaft in his saw mill, but rescued just as one of his arms was seized by a cog. The shock to his nervous system, however, completely prostrated him.

Daniel Ferguson, an old resident of Jackson, was struck by a train in that city, last Wednesday, badly bruised about the face and breast, and thrown down an embankment, where he lay insensible until found and cared for.

James Trombley, of West Bay City, lifted a pond net last week Tuesday morning and found in it 1,800 pounds of pickerel, which at four cents per pound, make $72—a very respectable night's work, the owner being asleep meanwhile.

The Tamarack mining company, Calumet, Houghton county, expects soon to strike the Allonez belt, and indications are that it will be rich, in which event the company will commence active operations and at the same time continue jinking for the Calumet lode.

When Ulum, the life Convict, was recently pardoned, the Jackson Patriot made certain statements which so excited the ire of Landlord Stillwell, of the tavern near Leonidas, St. Joseph county, where Estabrook, the murdered man, stopped, that he threatens a libel suit.

The projected building for the Y. M. C. A. at Grand Rapids is taking shape, negotiations having been commenced for suitable grounds. The proposed structure is a brick building 66x120 feet in size, four stories high and covered with a mansard roof. Its estimated cost is $40,000 and the grounds $10,000.

Work on the Battle Creek street railroad will be commenced at once, and completed within 60 days. The line will be two miles long. Next year it will be extended to Goguac lake, where a stock company is expected to build a hotel. The road cost $15,000, of which the citizens donated $3,000.

It is said that the largest fleece ever recorded in the United States at a public shearing was taken last Thursday at Lansing, at the meeting of the Michigan merino sheep breeders' association. It was from a two year old ram, "Diamond," owned by A. T. Short, of Coldwater, was grown in 363 days and weighed 41 pounds and three ounces.

Wesley Caster, an old and most respected resident of Rose, Oakland co., was instantly killed last Thursday. While riding with his wife and son he saw some game by the roadside, and attempted to take the gun from the wagon when the team started and the gun was discharged, the entire load passing through his heart. He was some 60 years, was a brother of Rev. E. E. Caster, formerly of the Fenton M. E. church, and leaves a large family.

THE LAND OF NOD.

Far away in the land of Nod,
Where only in dreams man's foot has trod,
Dwells the slumber king on his shadow throne
Where he patiently sits till day is done.
Where he rises and puts his nightcap on.
Now as he thinks he doth offer smile,
And he hastily sends his boys the while
Then the elves of sleep, as he sees them come,
Quietly bow to him, one by one,
Then fly to the homes of earth, he said
Where they place a poppy each poor head
Till the eyes can no longer keep open wide
The good, with the weight, nod from side to side
And take by force doth on them creep

Three Gallant Dogs.

THEIR EFFORTS TO RESCUE AN IRISH ONE FROM A WATERY GRAVE.

The South Bend (Ind.) Tribune relates the following instance of dog fidelity: All day Monday four dogs were playing on the shore ice which runs out into the river from the Singer factory dock. At least three of the dogs were of the breed known as setters. Between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon some of the Singer employes, who work in the building along the river, and who had noticed the dogs at different times during the day, were attracted by a great commotion among them. Three of them were running up and down the river along the edge of the ice, but the fourth one was missing. Directly one of the dogs was seen to reach his head in the water over the edge of the ice and grasp some object in his teeth and try to pull it out of the water. The object was the dog who had fallen or jumped into the river and was unable to get upon the ice again. The efforts of the dog on the ice was also unsuccessful, and he released his hold, while all three of the dogs set up a brisk barking, varied occasionally by dismal howls. Finally another effort was made to rescue their companion, all the dogs joining in it, but the slippery ice allowed him no a good foothold, and the distance from the ice down to the water was so far that, after three or four trials, they gave it up. They then held consultation with heads close together, and two of them started off up town, apparently to get help, while the third one laid himself down on the ice close to the edge, as if to keep guard over their companion, who was paddling in the current for dear life, and could just manage to keep his nose above the water. At this stage of the proceedings two men came to the rescue of the dogs. They procured long boards and running it a short distance beyond the ice out on them stepped upon it and together they pulled the dog in. He was almost dead with exhaustion and many cuts with cold. The dog who had remained a watcher made every possible demonstration of joy when his companion was safely landed, and was soon after joined by the other two in like expressions, they having returned from an unsuccessful hunt for help a short time after the dog was rescued. The record of this is one of the most remarkable instances of dog sagacity we have ever heard, and its truth is vouched for by [illegible]

To Be Patient.

[illegible] who, owing to their worldly comfort, have nothing to do but to be [illegible] patient, [illegible] than working for wife or work on a wounded dog or cat. Amanda has no time to think of her sons or nieces. Most young men are forced to get their living whether they like it or not, but a large number of young ladies in a family have nothing to do. They are above the necessity of following any occupation; they are often too many in a family to assist in domestic duties; they have returned home from school with some very poor accomplishments; their knowledge of French and German is not sufficient to allow them to converse in those languages; and just enough music to indulge in a doleful song or lively play on the piano. They dawdle through the day in a listless way, and fall victims to a thousand little ailments which the doctor is supposed to put right by physic. And the most curious thing is that, should the instincts of the girl force her to put some of her energies into use, she is as likely as not to be thwarted by the mother, who insists upon it that her darling is overtasking herself.

Fruit Canning

It is not many years since every good housewife felt called upon at least once a year to take a great deal of trouble in preserving a supply of fruit for use during the winter months. The purchase of fruit, jars, the picking, or purchase, and sorting of fruit, the purchase of sugar, the boiling and preparation of the syrup, oftentimes in the hottest weather, was a task which many a good housewife looked forward to with some trepidation while the uncertainties attending the keeping qualities of the preserves, after they were manufactured, made this a rather undesirable feature in housekeeping.

Within a few years, however, all this has become unnecessary, the manufacture of preserves on a large scale with skilled labor and improved appliances has proven, as in many other branches of manufacture, a great advance, and while there are some thrifty housewives who still think their "home-made" preserves are better than the "store" article, it is undoubtedly true that the canned preserves are decidedly finer, and in a number of cases are more appetizing and delicate than the home-made article. I say this with all due respect for the skill shown by many careful, conscientious housewives throughout the land, but in this case the doctrine "survival of the fittest," I think, is quite applicable. Too many people are apt to sit down, fold their hands, and declaim against anything not made at home, at least as far as preserves and candied fruits are concerned. The sword, I must admit, cuts both ways. While I have wrestled carefully and conscientiously at many houses with alleged preserves made at home, I have suffered the "pangs of Tantalus" from atrocious compounds put on the market by conscienceless manufacturers. For the benefit of those who desire to "do up" their own fruits I append a few trustworthy receipts:

Fill the jar with the desired fruit while cold. Make a syrup of sugar (quantity as given below) by boiling well to prevent fermentation, or it can be put on fruit dry. Fill jar with fruit, pour sugar over it until jar is full half-way up the neck; screw on covers of jars without rubber rings; put a board indented with holes in bottom of wash-boiler and stand jars on it; fill boiler with cold water up to neck of jars; boil (time necessary for different fruits is given below) then remove jars one by one, take off covers, fill with boiling water, put on rubber rings and screw covers on tightly as possible. The same process is used in preserving all kinds of fruits.

Habit.

How little the importance of this word strikes to many of us, although, as many examples are proof, the spirit is being wrought not only for the present time, but for all futurity. Is it not evidence, then that unless the example set is correct, the children will be afflicted with the bad habits and short reminds of to-day? Our jails, reform houses and penitentiaries are the outward results of kind. View the thing as you will, serious doubts must intrude from inattention to it.

From infancy up note the difference in individuals as they advance to womanhood or manhood, and you will be pained in many instances at the result which habit has wrought alone. The hopes and prospects of many a bright, intelligent youth and of many a well meaning man have been forever blasted through negligence to the subject matter.

The Sexton Writes Us.

Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I fell to my bowels. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now a well man, able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc.

Was afflicted with Catarrh and Cold in the Head. I tried many remedies without any beneficial effects, at last I used Elys' Cream Balm, which effectually cured me. W. H. I. Hillard, Dentist, Bordentown, N. J.

For the treatment of Catarrh, Cold in the Head, Catarrhal Deafness and Hay Fever we call particular attention to a valuable remedy. Ely's Cream Balm. We hear the most favorable reports of its curative effects. We would strongly recommend this discovery to our patrons, being fully convinced it will please in every case. Dan. C. Maxwell, Druggist, Jackson, Mich.

SOMEWHAT OF A SNORER.—Gen. Geo. A. Sheridan, was going from Boston to Rochester in a sleeping car, where he had a whole section. He was sitting on the lower berth in the morning, about to put his shoes on, when he was accosted by a kind-looking gentleman opposite, who was also putting on his shoes, with the inquiry: "My friend, are you a rich man?" George looked astonished, but answered the pleasant-faced, tired-looking gentleman with a "Yes, I'm tolerably rich." A pause occured, and then came another question: "How rich are you?" "About $700,000 or $800,000. Why?" "Well," said the old man, "If I was as rich as you say you are, and snored as loud as I know you do, I would hire a whole sleeper every time I traveled."

Mind the corner where life's road turns.

Humbugged Again.

I saw so much said about the merits of Hop Bitters, and my wife who was always doctoring, and never well, teased me so urgently to get her some, I concluded to be humbugged again; and I am glad I did, for in less than two months' use of the Bitters, my wife was cured, and she has remained so for eighteen months since. I like such humbugging.—H. T., St. Paul.—Pioneer Press.

A Prevention and Cure

For ALL Diseases peculiar to Women.

WOMEN know what these diseases are, but do not always give proper attention to their symptoms, viz:

Headaches, Lassitude,
Pale or Muddy Complexion,
Sleeplessness, Palpitation,
Numbness, Nausea, Dizziness,
Dry Cough, Nervous Irritation,
Weak and Lame Back, and pains in various parts of the body.

Zoa-Phora is not a Cure-all. It applies to this special class of diseases. Here it is almost perfect.

Not a temporary stimulant but a permanent cure.

TESTIMONIALS I have in abundance from persons in the best society who prefer that their evidence be given privately to those asking it.

MOTHERS, are your DAUGHTERS ailing? Look well to the cause. Send for my advice to mothers.

Requests for testimonials and advice will receive my careful attention.

THE WORLD RENOWNED

WALTER A. WOOD

NEW IMPROVED BINDER.

M. E. Conklin, Agent.

TECUMSEH, MICH.

1883. FOR THE SEASON OF 1883.

There has been already sold 439,554 of these Machines.

This record more than anything we can assert or claim for the merits of the WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES, should commend them to the favor of the Farmer.

The evidence of the success of our machines, and of their unrivalled superiority in merit and public favor, does not rest upon any bare assertion of ours, but upon facts, and these facts are uncontrovertible. We have always maintained, and do still maintain, that the best possible test of merit in Harvesting Machines is their long-continued success in practical use, and upon this standard we have ever been and still are content to rest our claims to public favor.

It is a well attested fact by all who use them, that the Wood Machines require far less repair than any other machine in use. No other Binder or Mower is as durable and free from breakages.

The Wood Twine Binder as now made retains those meritorious features which have rendered it UNAPPROACHABLE BY RIVALS in the past, and which are already familiar to the farming public, and also contains such RADICAL IMPROVEMENTS as will certainly place it ANOTHER LONG STEP IN ADVANCE of all competition. In the family war of the different machine manufacturers the Wood has come off victorious and remains master of the field.

The manufacturers have followed up the new binder, during the progress of the harvest of 1882, through grain fields without number, from one end of the United States to the other, from Texas to Dakota, from Virginia to Vermont, and even as far north as Prince Edward Island in the British Dominions, where the latest growing grain crops are to be found—and the results of this close and protracted inspection have fully warranted the representations made, strong though they be.

There has been various improvements of importance in the details of both the Harvester and Binder for 1883. All we ask is for the farmers of this vicinity to examine the Walter A. Wood Machines before placing their order, and we have no fear as to the result, as it is conceded by all that it is the most perfect machine in all its details, manufactured.

ASK FOR THE WALTER A. WOOD, AND TAKE NO OTHER.

For Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic and Nervous Disorders.

A CARD.

We the undersigned, having received great and permanent benefit from the use of "COMPOUND OXYGEN," prepared and administered by Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, of Philadelphia, and being satisfied that it is a new discovery in medical science, and all that is claimed for it, consider it a duty which we owe to the many thousands who are suffering from chronic and so-called "incurable" diseases to do all that we can to make its virtues known, and to inspire the public with confidence.

We have personal knowledge of Drs. Starkey & Palen. They are educated, intelligent and conscientious physicians, who will not, we are sure, make any statement which they do not know or believe to be true, nor publish any testimonials or reports of cases which are not genuine.

A Remarkable Sermon.

Following is part of a sermon preached by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, on the subject of the love of God for fallen humanity. The discourse provoked much discussion and differs materially from what is considered good orthodoxy:

"I have denounced with indignation the Calvinistic doctrines of decrees. The presentation is outrageous of the character of a being who, for his own glory, created a large part of the human race for damnation and another large part for blessing, and without any regard to the future of the damnable or the saveable. The most atrocious slander on the human race is set forth in the Saybrook and Westminster platforms, and the Presbyterian Catechism. Discussion matured that the old was good enough in that far time but not good for any change. Every man who enters the Presbyterian ministry says that he will preach these doctrines of a hideous God as set forth in the shorter or longer catechisms. There is no treason to humanity so utter, no ground so dangerous for a young man to put his foot upon, for to

The New York Sun announces its platform for 1884 as follows: Let the tariff be for revenue, let the tariff be the only source of revenue, let all internal taxes be abolished except the tax on spirits, let the fund from this latter source be retained only to meet the arrearages on pensions. This platform though not a perfect one will do very well.

The Civil Service Commissioners are greatly agitated over the inevitable female question, and know not whether to admit women on equal terms with men as competitors for appointment to subordinate public offices. This is not a question of female suffrage, or of the superiority of either sex. It is a simple matter of ability to do certain clerical work, and if the women are best fitted for such work the men will have to take a back seat.

The New York Herald, while warning the striking workmen in different sections of the country to abstain from all violence and lawlessness counsels them to bear in mind the fact:

"That so long as the present high tariff remains so long they will be exposed to having their wages cut down. High tariff means low wages, necessarily; because we can now manufacture more, in most of the great branches, than the country can consume, and manufacturers cannot sell their surplus in foreign markets because the high tariff makes raw materials too dear. They must either stop their mills and workshops, which many are doing, or cut down wages, which many others are doing. With low or no duties on raw materials any thoughtful workingman ought to see that wages could rise, because what would be saved by low or no duties on the raw materials could be safely added to wages. Whenever a manufacturing employer proposes to cut down wages let his workmen remember this truth, that high tariff makes low wages."

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, April 28th, 1883.

The sensation of the week has been the systematic raid on the gambling houses conducted by Inspector Byrnes, by special order of the Police Commissioners. The inside history of this spasmodic movement is simply that Commissioner French, whose term is expiring, wants to be reappointed, and a tremendous effort is being made to bloodwink the public into believing that the police are doing their utmost to clean the city of iniquity. Unfortunately for Mr. French everybody sees through the scheme, and his efforts will be defeated just on account of the exceptional rigor with which the matter is pushed. The manner in which Byrnes has been making his raids is further evidence of a peculiar one. He only seized the furniture, and all the property found in the gambling houses was confiscated. This represents something like fifty or sixty thousand dollars in value. The smaller fry were the first ones pulled. The better establishments were not visited until twenty-four hours later. During that time the astute proprietors, who can take a hint without exactly being knocked down with a barn door, removed their property, and when the vigilant police came there was no one in the houses except perhaps a colored servant, and certainly no suspicious furniture. Of course this excitement will not last long. Two weeks hence the houses will be going again. Everybody expects that.

Among the establishments visited and closed was the famous one at 818 Broadway. This is perhaps the most noted gaming house in the country, and among the victims of games of chance in Europe is as well known as the fashionable "clubs" in Paris. During the war and immediately after it, play used to be very high here. Even as late as six or seven years ago there was no limit to the stakes either at faro or roulette. It was no rare thing to see twenty and thirty thousand dollars change hands on the turn of a card. It was magnificently furnished. There was nothing gaudy about it; but every article in the rooms, down to the very cuspadores showed taste and refinement.

Policy raids are next in order, and then an effort is to be made to root out houses of ill fame. But how long will this last? It is really dreadful how low life is getting in this metropolis. Talk about Paris; the capitol on the Seine is quiet compared with the Empire City, and what does it all arise from? Nothing but the insane desire among all classes and both sexes to make money fast in order to spend it in luxurious living. The other day I met the manager of one of the most prominent and honorable private detective bureaus. "You don't know what a demand there is at present for so-called 'shadows,' men who follow people about and watch their movements. Husbands get them to follow their wives, and wives engage them to dog their husbands. It is perfectly nauseating. And the worst of it is that this demand has encouraged a class of idle sharpers to go in as shadows on their own hook. They frequent streets wherein reside gamblers and fast women, and visitors to them are watched and followed. Some fine day, after the history of the game has been fully acquired, the victim is presented with an account of his movements for months past. Money is asked for the suppression of the facts and generally given, for the victim in nine cases out of ten has no redress from the blackmailers. It is an awful state of affairs."

Central Park now blossoms out in all its Spring time loveliness, and as one sees the children scampering over the walks one gets himself to think that after all there may be some redeeming feature in this wicked world, and that there are some men and women at least who are not plotting how to get a divorce quickest. Apropos of children there is a movement on foot among a number of people devoted to educational interests to establish a large kindergarten, and connect it with a school to be modelled on the principle of the academies of German cities known as gymnasiums. The public school system as it is at present conducted in our city is not a good one. It crams the mind without developing it. The kindergarten for little children, and the gymnasium for grown up pupils remedies this, and will give us a rising generation of mental and physical strength, not the puny creatures which now fill our commercial and banking houses by day, and our theatres and billiard rooms at night.

The trade schools which were established some time ago are in a very flourishing condition, and the number of applicants is so large to several of them that the patrons of the technical school of the Metropolitan Museum of Art are thinking of opening another next fall.

Mrs. Langtry comes back to town next week, and opens as Galatea in Gilbert and Sullivan's Pygmalion and Galatea. I think she will turn out a failure. There is but a slight demand for seats.

Minneapolis Harvester AND Twine Binder.

The only Binder Manufactured having

MR. APPLEBY'S Latest Improvements.

The record this popular binder made last season in Lenawee Co., is abundantly ample evidence to convince any farmer that this is the latest improved, easiest handled and by far the most perfect working Harvester and Binder in the market. Mr. J. F. Appleby, the inventor of the Appleby Binder superintends the construction of the Minneapolis, and with the improvements of 1883, especially the double packer trip, it is thoroughly adapted to the wants of the Michigan farmer, as there is a great variation in the size and condition of our grain the Binder can be moved instantly and easily, also the raising and lowering of the whole machine by the driver in his seat.

The machine has all the valuable points that any other has and many very vital points that no other machine has. Last season we sold 32 of these machines to some of the best farmers in this vicinity and we have a good testimonial from every one of them, besides others that own other binders that have seen the superior working of the Minneapolis acknowledge its superiority over all others. No other Binders ever sold in Lenawee Co. can produce such a record.

I am thankful to my friends and neighbors for their kindness at the deathbed and during the sickness of my beloved wife.

SAMUEL FLETCHER.

The following we clip from an eastern paper, and leave our readers to guess who the poor boy is:

C. H. H. (Tecumseh) writes: "I, like a good many others, am in trouble, and come to you for advice. I am a young man, twenty two years of age, and keep company with a young lady three months my senior, who works out by the week. My folks are opposed to my keeping company with her, and say if I keep on they will disown me. Now, dear Editor, I love this girl dearly, and she has told me that my love was returned. Please inform me what to do?" Our advice to you is to marry the young lady as soon as possible.

We have received the initial number of the Sunday Morning Herald, a new weekly issue by Allen & Redfield, at Adrian. It is an eight page seven column paper, well filled with reading matter, and if the first number be a criterion of what it will continue to be it certainly ought to prosper.

W. H. Brearley, of the Detroit Evening News, has made the first announcement of the seventh annual excursion. This time it will take people to and across the sea. The round trip to the sea will be $22. The round trip across the sea will be $150, from Detroit. Send three cents for a circular, or thirty cents for an illustrated guide book.

Sunday Morning Herald: A short time since a musical organization was formed in this city, styled the T. T. club, composed of ten of Adrian's fairest and youngest society daughters. From its inception it was a pronounced success, and to-day that band of music-loying young ladies, if allowed full scope, would occasion more suicides or murders, than any other one cause conceivable.

The base ball season is at hand, and the players are gathering for practice in their respective cities. Besides the Detroit league nine, there will be several nines in Michigan, which will be stronger than some of the league were last season. It is predicted that this will be a more brilliant season than any preceding one, both in the matter of finances, and for accurate and skillfull playing by the nines.

P. S. McKinnon has concluded to retire from the justice office, and has accepted a position in the counting room of H. Brewer & Co. While many of his friends will regret to lose him from the legal fraternity, they can but congratulate H. Brewer & Co. upon this acquisition to their office force. Mr. McKinnon's previous training in the justice office will be a valuable aid to him in his new location. We look upon this new arrangement as a very fitting one, and believe it will result in permanent benefit to all parties concerned.

"Errors Chains" is the title of a new book which gives a complete and graphic history of the many strange beliefs, superstitions, practices, sacred writings, system of philosophy, legend and traditions, customs and habits of mankind throughout the world, ancient and modern. It gives an account of heathen idolatry, the gods of Greece and Rome, Bramahism, Hindoo worship, the Karens, the fire-worshipers, Confucien temples, the Buddhist Bible, Mohammedanism and many other religious systems. It is probably the best work of the kind now in print.

A congratulatory banquet was given to Prof. Maclean at Adrian last Saturday evening, at the Central Hotel. There were 109 guests at the tables, many of the guests being ladies. Judge Howell presided over the gathering, and brief addresses were made by Prof. Frothingham, Dr. Rynd, Col. Eldridge, W. A. Underwood, A. L. Millard, F. R. Stebbins, Judge Geddes, L. H. Salsbury, C. R. Miller, C. E. Weaver, Seth Bean and Drs. Allen and Baker. Prof. Maclean was presented with a handsome silver water pitcher, and in response he spoke about half an hour in relation to his "celebrated case."

The Michigan crop report, April 1st, just received from the secretary of state, puts the condition of the winter wheat throughout the state at 85 per cent of the condition April 1st, 1882, owing to the ice fields which formed on the fields early in March. Apples will average about 90 per cent., and peaches about 60 per cent. of last year's crop. In Emmet county the live stock is reported as falling off from the condition April 1st, 1882, as follows: Horses 4 per cent., cattle 4 per cent., sheep 3 per cent., hogs 6 per cent. Our apples promise 100 per cent or no loss, while our chances on peaches are put down as being only 5 per cent. We wonder how near right these figures are.

Hudson Gazette: As long as the lamp of life holds out Brother Japheth Cross, of Adrian, is bound to cut a figure now and then as plaintiff or defendant in the courts. He has been much persecuted or prosecuted since we have known him, and is something of a prosecutor himself. His latest effort was to sue a colored tenant for back rent. Japheth managed his own case, and city attorney Smith appeared for the colored brother. Japheth either managed his case badly or court or jury got the relations of litigants transposed (in their minds), for they so far ignored the claim of the plaintiff as to bring in $25 damages for defendant. The Record says that is a sad case of a citizen starting out to shear wool and himself getting fearfully shorn.

"Shube" Mosher arrived home from Florida last Thursday, where he has a position with a firm in the taxidermist business. The firm sent him up north here to secure a collection of ducks.

The dates of the Ohio, Indiana and Michigan Agricultural and Mechanical Fair Circuit, are as follows: Ohio State Fair, at Columbus, O., September 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th. Tri-State Fair, at Toledo, O., September 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th. Michigan State Fair, at Detroit, Mich., Sept. 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th and 21st. Indiana State Fair, at Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, and 29. N. E. Indiana Fair, at Waterloo, Ind. October 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th and 5th.

The theatre going people of Chattanooga were highly entertained last night with the excellent performance of Briggs Boston Minstrels. The house was well filled, and the performance, to speak of it in a general way, was simply grand. The audience was kept laughing throughout, and the decision was universally concurred in that it is the best minstrel show ever in the city. The music of the inimitable quartette was perfectly charming and the frequency of the encore showed how much it was appreciated. Briggs' Minstrels will hereafter be a favorite here.—Chattanooga, Tenn., Daily Democrat, March 3, 1883.

Hudson Post: About 2 o'clock last Monday morning Mrs. Montgomery Mackey, of South Pittsford, was awakened by a noise in the kitchen which she supposed was made by the cat. On being further disturbed by a repetition of the same, she arose with the intention of turning pussy out of doors. On entering the kitchen she was surprised at finding the door wide open. She stamped on the floor, at the same time employing the phraseology which people usually make use of on similar occasions. Her astonishment can be better imagined than described at perceiving not a cat's familiar form, but that of a man rushing from the pantry, through the kitchen and out on the public highway, along which he sped as fast as his legs could carry him. The unbidden guest was doubtless a tramp, who failing to obtain a hearty supper was endeavoring to obtain an early breakfast.

Our town has been visited by another show—Thompson's Comedy Co. We would like to write up an event like this, but are unable to do so, as shortly after the building of our new opera house, we were obliged to discharge our dramatic editor, because, as there was only an average of one entertainment each season, it would hardly pay to keep a man especially for this business. But we must not pass by an opening of the opera house, and hence give the job of writing it up to our man who reports the dog fights, street rows, and other things that would compare favorably with this show. The few people who attended seemed to feel good to be able to get into the opera house, and would sometimes even laugh at what Thompson termed a joke, because they were so pleased to be again allowed to view the inside of one of the prettiest opera houses in Michigan. Saturday night of this week we will listen to Briggs' Operatic Minstrels. The company is good, but does not compare with Callender's, the company that was here shortly after Briggs showed the first time, but still there is nothing bad about the show, and we must all go if nothing more than to improve the chance of seeing the inside of the opera house.

As many of our citizens are afflicted with the same disease as some of our Detroit friends, we publish an extract from the Evening News in reference to the telephone, trusting it may save many an angry turn at the crank and more fully explain the workings of this great invention: When some people wish to use the telephone and do not get attended to as promptly as they desire at the central office, they lose their temper and turn the crank furiously. It may be interesting to such people to know that one call for the central office is all that is required, and that any further ringing is useless. The operator attends to what is called a "switch-board." This board is the terminus of 50 wires. Each wire has a number, and a list is before the operator containing the name of each subscriber and the number assigned him. Above the switch board is another board called the annunciator, having 50 numbers, and over each number is a small brass plate, hinged at the lower side. When a subscriber rings his telephone once it releases an armature which allows the brass plate over his number to fall down thus exposing the number. The operator answers the call as soon as she can, and replaces the plate. No bell is rung at the central office at all and those who think they are making a good deal of noise may as well know that their noise is heard only by themselves, for after the plate is dropped the operator is in blissful ignorance of their worry. When a rush occurs the operator may make a mistake and put up a number without answering it, in which case a second call would be necessary.

J. R. Cairns, the agent for the Deering Binder has opened an office and store room across the way where he will keep a full supply of those celebrated machines on hand. He has a preliminary announcement in the HERALD this week.

There will be a meeting of the old soldiers at the Opera House, Friday evening, April 27, to organize a Post of the Grand Army of the Republic. All old soldiers are respectfully invited to be present at that time.

H. W. STEVENS,

J. DAVIDSON,

Col. Sumner Spofford has left at our office a copy of a business pamphlet issued by the Iowa Loan and Trust Co., located at Des Moines. Des Moines is rapidly becoming one of the best towns in the west. It has a population of over thirty thousand and has thirteen railroads centering there.

On going through the extensive warerooms of Wm. McCowen, our live furniture dealer, yesterday, we were greatly surprised at the large and varied stock now on hand, comprising the finest of goods in all departments. Mr. McCowen knows the wants of the community, and parties purchasing of him will find their purchases just as recommended. He has something to say in our advertising columns this week. Read and profit thereby.

L. F. Wheeler gave his rambles at the Opera House Tuesday evening. The subject of the entertainment was Rome, Capri and Sicily, and he took his audience among the principle attractions of these ancient cities. Since leaving home last fall Mr. Wheeler had added many new scenes to his large collection and his series of entertainments are unquestionably among the best now traveling. He had a fair audience and they were more than pleased with the entertainment.

BARGAINS IN WALL PAPER.

I would respectfully tender my best feelings to my opponents in trade, and announce to the public that wall paper, paints, oils, brushes and all goods in my line can be purchased at my store for 20 per cent. less than at any other place in town, and I propose to stay as long as my goods last.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Necessitating a Surgical Operation—Loving Mother Attempts to Take a Pair of Shears from Her Child. PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner, of South Roundout, Ulster Co., N.Y., some weeks ago, attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician, what she found, and intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Great distress, to a woman having the care of a household in an irreproachable family, in this crisis Mrs. W. applied to the well known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N.Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. Not owing to any great mental discipline. Truth did work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by our druggists at one dollar a bottle.

A Common-sense Remedy.

SALICYLICA.

No More Rheumatism, Gout or Neuralgia.

Immediate Relief Warranted.
Permanent Cure Guaranteed.

Five years established and never known to fail in a single case, acute or chronic. Refer to all prominent physicians and druggists for the standing of Salicylica.

SECRET.

THE ONLY DISSOLVER OF THE POISONOUS LACTIC ACID WHICH EXISTS IN THE BLOOD OF RHEUMATIC AND GOUTY PATIENTS.

SALICYLICA is known as a common-sense remedy, because it strikes directly at the cause of Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia, while so many so-called specifics and supposed panaceas only treat locally the effects.

It has been conceded by eminent scientists that outward applications, such as rubbing with oils, ointments, liniments and soothing lotions will not eradicate those diseases which are the result of the poisoning of the blood with Uric Acid.

SALICYLICA works with marvelous effect on this acid and so removes the disorder. It is now exclusively used by all celebrated physicians of America and Europe. Highest Medal awarded by Paris reports 95 per cent. cures in three days.

REMEMBER

that SALICYLICA is a certain cure for Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia. The most intense pains are subdued almost instantly.

Give it a trial. Relief guaranteed or money refunded.

Thousands of testimonials sent on application.

$1 a Box, 6 Boxes for $5.

Sent free by mail on receipt of money. Ask your druggist for it.

But do not be deluded into taking imitations or substitutes, or something recommended as "just as good." Insist on the genuine with the name of Washburne & Co., on each box, which is guaranteed chemically pure under our signature, an indispensible requisite to insure success in the treatment. OF ANOTHER AGE.

Gradually Supplanted by a Better Article. Certain Old Things are Done Away.

In the reception room of the Western Union Telegraph building, on Broadway, New York, are exhibited the coarse, crude and clumsy instruments of the infancy of the telegraph. They are of a vastly low type. More perfect machinery has superseded them.

Years ago what is now styled the old-fashioned porous plaster did some good service. There was then nothing better of the kind. Now all that is changed. Science and study has gone deeper into the secrets of the medicine and produced BENSON'S CAPCINE CORN'S PLASTER, which embodies all the excellencies that far possible in an external remedy. The old plasters were slow—the Capcine is rapid; they were uncertain—the Capcine is sure. Cheaper articles bear similar names. Be careful, therefore, that some thrifty druggist does not deceive you. In the center of the genuine is cut the word CAPCINE. Price 25c. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P.O. address.

Dropping Into Poetry.

THE EXCHANGE EDITOR DOES IT NATURALLY.

"If you please, sir," said the young lady timidly, as the exchange editor handed her a chair, "I have composed a few verses, or partially composed them, and I thought you might help me finish them and then print them." She says that they are real nice as far as they go, and pa takes the Eagle every day.

She was a handsome creature, with beautiful blue eyes, and a crowning glory as yellow as golden rods. There was an expression of pathos on her face, a hopelessness that appealed to the holiest emotions, and the exchange editor made up his mind not to crush the longing of that pure heart if he never struck another lick.

"May I show you the poetry?" continued the ripe, red mouth. "You will see that I couldn't get the last lines of the verses, and if you would please be so kind as to help me—"

Help her! Though he had never even read a line of poetry, the exchange editor felt the spirit of the divine art flood his soul as he yielded to the bewildering music. Help her! Well, he should smile.

"The first verse runs like this," she went on, taking courage from his eyes:

"How softly sweet the Autumn air
The dying woodland fills
And Nature turns from restful care—"

"To anti-bilious pills," added the exchange editor with a jerk. "Just the thing. It rhymes, and it's so. You take anybody now. Half the people you meet are——"

"I suppose you know best," interrupted the young girl. "I hadn't thought of it in that way, but you have a better idea of such things. Now the second verse is like this:"

"The dove-eyed kine upon the moor
Look tender, meek and sad;
While from the valley comes the roar—"

"Of the matchless liver-pad! roared the exchange editor. "There you get it. That finishes the second so as to match the first. It combines the fashions with poetry, and carries the right idea right home to the fireside. If I only had your ability in starting a verse, and my genius in winding it up, I'd quit the shears and open in the poetry business to-morrow."

"Think so?" asked the fair young lady. "It don't strike me as keeping up the theme."

"You don't want to. You want to break the theme here and there. The reader likes it better. O yes! were you to keep up the theme it gets monotonous."

"Perhaps that's so," rejoined the beauty, brightening up. "I didn't think of that. Now I'll read the third verse:"

"How sadly droops the dying day
As night springs from the glen,
And moaning twilight seems to say—"

"The old man's drunk again, wouldn't do would it?" asked the exchange editor. "Somebody else wrote that, and we might be accused of plagiarism. We must have this thing original. Suppose we say—now just suppose we say, 'Why did I spout my pen?'"

"Is that new?" inquired the sweet, rosy lips. "At least I never heard it before. I don't know what it means."

"New? Indeed its new. Ben is the Presbyterian name for overcoat, and spout means to hock. 'Why did I spout my ben?' means: 'Why did I shove my topper? That's just what twilight would think of first, you know. O don't be afraid, that's just immense."

"Well I'll leave it to you," said the glorious girl with a smile that pinned the exchange editor's heart to his spine. This is the fourth verse:"

"The merry milkmaid's sombre song,
Re-echoes from the rocks,
As silently she trips along—"

"With holes in both her socks, by Jove!" cried the delighted exchange editor. "You see——"

"O, no, no!" remonstrated the blushing maiden. "Not that."

"Certainly," protested the exchange editor, warming up. "Nine to four she's got 'em, and you get fidelity to fact with wealth of poetical expression. The worst of poetry generally is, you can't state things as they are. It ain't like prose. But here we've busted all the established notions, and put up an actual existence with a veil of genuine poetry over it. I think that's the best idea we've struck yet."

"I don't seem to look at it as you do, but of course you are the best judge. Pa thought I ought to say:

"As silently she trips along,
In Autumn's yellow tracks."

Wouldn't that do?"

"Do! Just look at it. Does tracks rhyme to rocks? Not in the Brooklyn Eagle it don't. Besides when you say 'tracks' and 'rocks,' you give the impression of some fellow who's scratching for safety. 'Socks' on the other hand, rhymes with the 'rocks' and beautifies them, while it touches up the milkmaid, and by describing her condition shows her to be a child of the very nature you are showing up."

"I think you're right," said the sweet angel. "I'll tell pa where he was wrong. This is the way the fifth verse runs:"

"And close behind the farmer's boy
Trills forth a lusty tune,
And slips beside the outside boy—"

"And splits his pantaloons! Done it myself; know just exactly how it is. Why, bless your heart, you—"

Snip, snip, snip. Paste, paste, paste. But it is with the saddest heart that the snips and pastes among his exchanges now. The beautiful vision that for a moment dawned upon him has left but the recollection in his heart of one sunbeam in his life quenched by the shower of tears with which she denounced him as a "nasty, brute," and went out from him forever.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Language of the Mouth.

"The latest language is the "language of the mouth." Imagine the fascination of reading a woman's character by her mouth, without any reference to what comes out of it. It can be done, however, according to a modern wiseacre, and here are the rules to be observed. If her mouth is very small, there is not much mind, but overmuch shallow sentiment. If she has a very large mouth she will possess a good brain, but the trouble is in kissing it. Large mouths put a man to an artistic test; he will be driven to his wits' end and will thus to begin at one corner and conclude on the other, or to make a heroic dash at the middle and endeavor to reach both ends. But if you are a kissing artist it can be covered nicely enough. If your sweetheart has a coarsely formed mouth she will be sensual and full of strong, coarse points of character, and will make a row in the family. If she has a delicately formed mouth, with rounded lips and of a velvety color, she will have much sensibility and perfection of character, but will not astonish by her brilliancy of conception or execution. If it is a good mouth because it is kissable and submissive. Shun blue-lipped or thin-lipped women; they will bore you to death with literature or women's rights, theorize while you want your dinner, or spoil your temper by their red-hot scolding tongues.

A Yankee in England.

At Liverpool, when I landed, I wanted to get on to Cardiff, so I asked my way of a gentleman in the street, and he says, "By Birkenhead;" but another comes up and he says, "That track is blocked with snow, and he gives me another direction, and in a civil, nice way, I shall have some funny things to tell them home. I see a notice about tickets, and I ask for one to Cardiff, and he says, "It's a pound and two." I give him two and he hands me the change. I get into the depot and says, "Where the trains?" "Here," says a sort of police officer. "The cars, I mean." "Answers, yell he says. "Them's them." "So I say, "Which for Cardiff?" and he says, "Who are you looked?" And I says, "No." "Then you can't go in unless you're booked," he says, and I began to think I had unlocked something in the way of papers, and would have to go to the American consul about it. "That be very sad, sah," said he. "It would be sad being booked," he answered in a way that made me feel timid, and I began to think of the high-handed style Britishers have of dealing with foreigners, and so I thought I would make a clean breast of the affair and tell him I didn't know what he meant; and he says: "Come this way and I'll show yer," which, holding a big fellow and me a little one, and a stranger, rather increases my trepidation, and the weather so bad and all; but he only took me to the place where I had bought my ticket, and he says, "There, that's the booking office," and I says, "What shall I do?" "Why, take your ticket," he says; and I answered that I had bought a ticket, "Why didn't you say so afore?" he says; and I said, "Why didn't you say so before?" and he says, "I did ask you if you was booked and you said no;" and then I laughed and told him I was an American and didn't understand, and then he laughed, and we had a drink.—[Correspondence New York Times.

Honorable Mention.

Of all the remedies on earth that well may claim attention, Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil commands especial mention. For wondrous power to cure disease, its fame there's none can throttle. Its merits are not in the puff, but but are inside the bottle. Rheumatism, neuralgia, sore throat, asthma, bronchitis' diphtheria, etc., are all cured by Thomas' Eclectric Oil.

One tale is good till another is told.

"The Commodore."

Jos. L. Foote, the Commodore, Elgin, Ill., says Thomas' Eclectric Oil cured him of sciatica with one application, thoroughly applied. It also cured him of a severe cold and cough. He thinks it a very valuable remedy, and will never be without it.

A Quick Recovery.

It gives us great pleasure to state that the merchant who was reported being at the point of death from an attack of Pneumonia, has entirely recovered by the use of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. Naturally he feels grateful for the benefits derived from using this remedy, for the lungs and throat; and in giving publicity to this statement we are actuated by motives of public benefaction, trusting that others may be benefited in a similar manner. They have a peculiar law in Tennessee which provides that no drinking-saloon shall be licensed to occupy any point (except in cities and towns) within four miles of an incorporated, institution of learning. This law has induced people to build school houses and have them incorporated but it makes liquor-dealers hostile to the extension of the school system, and they have a habit of causing them to be burned down.

Girls and Women as Clerks.

"I don't want any in my office," "Can't depend on them," says a business man. "Are there cure Sick and Nervous Headache and Periodical troubles making the women strong and well."

A valuable discovery has been made by Mr. Alexander Adams. It is the exhaustless energy contained and concentrated observations and experiments of years. Variations of climate in these earth currents, which are invariably present on all telegraphic wires underground, cause disturbances of the mind with respect to the earth.

COMMISSIONERS' NOTICE.

IN the matter of the estate of Tiporge W. Allen Sr., deceased.

The undersigned having been appointed by the Judge of Probate for the County of Lenawee, Michigan, commissioners to receive, examine and adjust all claims and demands against the estate of George W. Allen, Sr., late of the township of Franklin, Lenawee county, Michigan, deceased, hereby give notice that we will meet for that purpose at the house of George W. Allen, Jr., in the township of Franklin, Lenawee county, Michigan, on the 9th day of May, 1883, and on the 9th day of August, 1883, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of each of said days, and that six months from the 9th day of February, 1883, have been allowed by the said court for the creditors of said estate to present said claims for examination and adjustment.

Dated April 7th, 1883.

ESTATE OF ELEAZER G. SCOFIELD.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate Office in the city of Adrian, on Monday, the 9th day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Eleazer G. Scofield, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Hiram Scofield, executor of the last will and testament of said deceased, alleging that he has paid all the debts of said deceased, and all specific legacies and expenses of administration on said estate that have accrued, and is ready to render final account and take for the allowance of said account and for a distribution of the residue of the estate of said deceased to the persons entitled thereto, and for his discharge.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 14th day of May next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

FRANKLIN TACTS.

Last Friday occurred the annual festival of the Sheep Breeders and Wool Growers Association of Franklin. The day was fine but the meeting was hardly a success, as most of the sheep were sheared by capital shearers late in the day, and then left their sheep at home. The sheep shown were all good ones and probably the best that could be found in Franklin.

AN EXCITING RIDE.

When blasting was discontinued at the Wistar mine (on the Zintop Mountain, Idaho,) the writer was for the time left in charge of the mill, containing the engine, stamps, battery, etc. With the exception of Print Eberson, the "powder boy," all the other workmen were discharged.

Print remained to keep me company. The foreman and chemist in charge of the amalgamating process also left. But it was necessary that some one should stay to guard the property until it should be relieved; and as I had been engineer, I was asked to do so through the winter.

This was in November, 1874. The open sheds and bunkers of the mill were boarded up, and everything made as snug as possible, to keep out the rain and snow. Thus it happened that Print and I lived there week after week, keeping a sort of "bachelor's hall."

That is to say we done our own cooking over a small stove in the mill, and boarded ourselves. Having plenty of time, we [illegible] vines and along the mountain-sides to the north of the ridge, where the mine was located; and Print began trapping martens, the sharp squeaks of which we now heard early every morning around the mill.

As powder-boy, it had been Print's business to carry the cans of powder and nitro glycerine in and out of the "drift." The latter explosive was purchased and received there, made up in cartridges, put in long tin cases, containing each a safety fuse and a small charge of gunpowder for firing the mightier rock-render.

From the mine down to the stage-house, or station, the distance was five miles, over a bare stony slope, in some places somewhat steep, in others nearly level, and too barren for trees and bushes. Nothing, in fact, grew on it save tufts of wire-grass.

The station building with its sheds was in plain sight, seemingly far below us. The mine was said to be thirteen hundred feet above Nimm's Creek, along which the stage road runs. We were in the habit of going to the station every second or third day after such supplies as we needed.

With a glass however, objects at the station and along the road would be plainly observed. In our idle moments we used to sit and watch the teams coming and going.

Snow fell at times during November and December, and on the 3d or 4th of January there came a prodigious storm. For thirty-six hours the wind blew terrifically, and the whirling clouds of fine snow blew in at every crack and chink of the mill.

The only place into which it did not drift was the engine-room, and into this we moved our stove; but even here had no easy task to keep warm. Luckily, we had dry pine wood enough left from the fuel for the engine, else we should assuredly have frozen to death.

The gale did not fairly abate till the third day, when the whole country looked white and wintry indeed. Not less than four feet of snow had come. Down in the valley there seemed to be even more of it than on the mountain.

The station and its sheds looked as though they were nearly buried. A great many teams had put in there for shelter, and we could see a number of snow-laden wagons standing outside, for which there was no room in the sheds. The teamsters were shoveling paths for taking the mules down to the creek to water.

Meantime, the stock of provisions which we had brought up on our backs five days before, was exhausted; we had only a dozen frozen potatoes left in the mill.

Some snow-shoes were hastily rigged from strips of thin cottonwood boards, with bands of leather nailed on for the straps, with bands of leather nailed on for the straps, and we were about setting off to go down to the station, when Print, who had been outside the mill, came excitedly back, exclaiming:—

"The redskins have come down on the stage-house! There's an awful battle! I can hear the guns goin' pop—pop—pop!"

I seized the glass and ran out of the mill. Plainly enough I could hear the distant crack of rifles, and even see a faint blue wreath of powder-smoke hanging over the station. With the glass I counted seventeen or eighteen Indians, who could be seen dodging about the bluffs on the opposite side of the creek on snow-shoes.

We had heard a rumor of hostile Indians several weeks before, when "Gray Eagle's band was said to be on a marauding expedition. Such reports, in fact, are always going at frontier settlements. The plunder of so many teams, snow-bound there at the stage-house, was probably the object the savages had in view.

For us this, of course was a most alarming matter. We knew not how soon the redskins might see our smoke and come up to the mine. There was nothing to prevent their seeing it; indeed, we had no doubt they had seen it all the morning.

Setting Print to watch their movements, I fell to work and barricaded the entrances to the mill as effectively as possible, with logs and uncrushed lumps of ore.

In the course of an hour, Print called out that the Indians had drawn off from the station and gone up to the timber, at the "bend" of the creek. Here they camped.

The teamsters and Hawkins at the station had given them so hot a reception that they had given up the attack, it seemed, but had camped near by, to be on the lookout for the teams. We could see their smoke. The bend was nearly a mile nearer the mine than the stage-house. The creek there bent back to the northwest; while the stage-house lay down a little south of east from the mine.

We had proof, only a little after noon, that the savages knew of our being at the mine. I was cleaning out one of two old carbines, when Print rushed in, saying that three Indians were coming up the mountain.

These were, however, merely scouts, who had come out to reconnoitre us. They walked entirely round the the crest of the ledges where the mine was located, but kept at a respectful distance. I sent two balls whizzing past their heads, to let them know we were ready for them; and Print had a nitro-glycerine cartridge ready to sling at them, if they ventured near. After peeping at the mills from all sides, they went away.

Meantime, the sky had darkened again. The weather was moderating, and by four o'clock rain was falling. We made a very thin soup of the shakings of a meal-bag and boiled and ate a few of our frozen potatoes; not very nourishing fare. I kept watch through the night, but let Print sleep a part of the time.

About midnight the sky cleared and the air became colder, with the wind from the north. By sunrise it was freezing sharply. The whole slope to the east and far onward over the bare peaks, beyond the creek, shone like ice.

A sharp crust had formed over the deep snow, not hard or thick enough to bear up a man, though a cayote might have run on it. There was no stirring out from the station; and, the Indians were still up at their camp in the timber, as we saw by their smoke.

By this time we were both getting hungry enough. We were actually suffering for want of food, and should the savages remain there, long we should be starved out. Had the nights been dark, I should have been hopeful of reaching the station under cover of the darkness; but there was a nearly full moon at the time, which on that snow crust, would render all objects plainly visible.

The savages were beyond doubt keeping a close watch, and it would be almost certain [illegible] than three fourths of a mile to run to our door. Yet in the famishing condition in which we were, and growing hungrier every hour, I had about concluded that we must both risk endeavoring to get to the stage-house, when Print suggested sliding down to the station on a hand-sled.

"But where's your hand-sled?" I asked.

"I can make one he said. "It will be a fearfully long slide, but I believe we can do it."

"Well, but won't the redskins head us off all the same?" said I.

"They'll have hard work to do it, when once we get a goin'," cried Print so confidently that I began to enter into his scheme.

Print, in fact, was from one of the Eastern states, where the boys are used to coasting. For myself, it was a matter I knew next to nothing of, snow being a rarity, indeed, in my native state of Louisiana.

So Print set to work to make a hand-sled—after a plan of his own. The "runners," as he called them, were fashioned from two wide pieces of ash plank, shaved off to a point at the front ends. While he was chamfering these, he bade me take off two hoops of broad sheet-iron from an empty tierce that stood in the store-room.

The hoops he straightened, smoothed and nailed to the bottoms of his runners, for shoes. So broad were the pieces of plank that the runners stood nearly a foot high, and they were coupled together with four or five stout ash cross-pieces, or bars.

A wide bit of board was nailed top of these to sit on; and this, with two or three cleats to hold on by, completed the vehicle. It was eight feet long by two and a half feet wide.

I advised putting up side-pieces to hold us on; but Print said no, we must cling by the cleats. He explained that he had made it longer than ordinary coasting sleds, in order that it might be sure not to cut into the snow-crust. In short, Print seemed to understand the business so well that I had merely to keep quiet and let him go ahead his own way.

I should say he was from three to four hours making his sled, with what aid I could give him; and the moment it was done he was for starting off. My own faith was not so strong as was his, and for some minutes I hesitated.

"Get on!" exclaimed Print. "We'll be there in ten minutes, or less time."

The sun was sinking low; but the whole broad, snowy slope shone and glistened like glass. From the north a cold wind blew in long, heavy gusts. It seemed a fearful ride and a fearful risk. I went back to get one of the carbines.

"Better leave it," Print said. "You'll have all you can do to hold on, without shutin'! Get pretty well forward and hang to them cleats like a sheep-tick. I'll ride behind and steer her down."

He pushed the sled along to the verge of the slope—and an instant later, we were gliding down the first of the steep inclines.

Faster—faster—faster!

How the cold wind cut our faces. The tears flew into my eyes. Jump—jump—jump we went, over hummocks and hollows.

Then came a wide level stretch across which the sled darted like a shuttle, bouncing from knoll to knoll; and ere I had hardly time to catch my breath, we were shooting down another steep ridge-side, fairly throwing up a spray from the icy snow-crust.

"Hold fast!" Print yelled; and next instant we were ricochetting over a frightfully rough place, where the snow scarcely filled the hollows betwixt the rocks. Bound—thump—grind! and we were capsized and went headlong.

But Print was up again in a moment—dragging the sled along to the crest of another steep descent. Save for a few bruises, we were uninjured.

"It's all plain sailing now," cried Print. "The roughest is past. But hold on tight! For we shall go like a lightning express down here!"

Already we were half way down to the station, with no Indians in sight. But we had hardly shoved off when a distant yell came to our ears, from up towards the timber-belt.

"There they are! They've seen us!" exclaimed Print. "Quick now!"

But before we had got well going, we saw three—four—FIVE redskins skimming along the crust on their raquettes, far down [illegible]

The sled gathered headway and shot down the long, glistering incline, Print keeping it headed straight for the station with an occasional jab of his heel. But those redskins were skating along on their raquettes as fast as a man could run; and they had but a comparatively short distance to go.

One was some distance in advance of the other four. I saw he had a gun. He intended to get very near us before we passed. I honestly think we were going a mile a minute. I could scarcely draw breath. The Indians raised a yell and rushed forward.

We were close on them now. The forward one stopped. I saw him cocking his gun—to let us have it when we dashed past. But he didn't get the chance for that. "Hang!" Print shouted to me, and gave a hard kick to the right, sending the sled straight on to the savage.

It was all done in a second of time, and my eyes were nearly blinded with the icy spray; but I felt a shock and indistinctly saw that Indian going heels over head—over and over.

Bang—bang—bang! went three or four guns at close quarters, but fortunately they all missed us.

Next moment we dashed up a big drift clean over the roof of one of the stage sheds—struck whack in the crust of the other side, bounded on twice or three times more, and brought up down in the bed of the creek.

The teamsters gave a "hurrah," and running out picked us up and helped us in.

We saw the redskin we had run down crawling slowly away; and presently the others carried him off to their camp.

We were blockaded there at the stage-house for over a fortnight, before a thaw came, when a company of cavalry arrived from the fort below, and cleared the road of Indians.—Youth's Companion.

Whalebone Now and Formerly.

Whalebone once brought a very high price, especially when hoopskirts were more in fashion than they are to-day. The Dutch formerly paid $3,500 for a ton of whalebone, but since 1763 it has never brought anything like that price. In 1818 it brought $450 a ton, in 1824 from $530 to $545; and in 1844 it varied from $1,080 for southern to $1,500 for northern bone. As the whale becomes scarce, of course whalebone will rise in the market, and at present the Dutch and the Scotch whalers are doing a very poor business. The Americans also complain, and now that this is the case, the inventive genius of man is trying hard to find a substitute for whalebone, and so far they have met with some success. Leather has given great satisfaction, and there is quite a similarity between the two substances. The horns, after undergoing a special process, are cut into strips which are compressed and straightened and rendered suitable for any purpose by the dressmaker. Compressed cane has also been adopted to act as a substitute for whalebone, but does not answer the purpose as well as buffalo horn. In France whalebone is 15 francs the kilogram; that it to say, it has tripled in price during the last quarter of a century. In 1853 the quantity of bone brought into the United States was 6,652,300 pounds; in 1873 it was 190,000 pounds; in 1880, 100,000 pounds. In 1853 whalebone was worth 35 cents a pound; in 1876, $2.50; and at the present time it is said to be selling at $2 per pound. In 1857, 143 vessels comprised the Greenland fleet, and in 1877 only sixteen were sent out. It will be observed that the business varies considerably from time to time, and it seems pretty certain that the best days of whaling are over for the present. It is said that nearly one-half of our whalebone is exported to France and Germany. There is no doubt that there is more whalebone consumed in Paris than in any other city in the world, for Paris carries off the palm in the manufacture of parasols and articles in the making of which whalebone forms a very material part. Then there are walking sticks and riding and driving whips, canes, corset bones, corset clasps, busks, hat bone, suspender bone, fishing rods and tips, landing rods for nets, drill bones, ferules, splints, probangs, paper cutters and folders, graining combs, boot shanks, shoe horns, policemen's loaded clubs, that require whalebone in their composition.

The best whalebone is obtained from the Greenland whale. From the mouth of one of those monsters from 2,000 to 3,000 pounds are often taken. The manufacture of whalebone into articles of use and ornament is not so extensive as one might imagine. It is principally confined to New York and Boston, four manufactories being in the former and three in the latter. When the raw whalebone is first received at the factory the hair is cut off in slabs. They are then soaked in water until they are soft, after which they are scraped of all the gum that adheres to them. They are next put in a steam-box, where a workman straightens them with a knife; they are finally polished, and are then ready to be made use of for any purpose that the dresser may see fit. Whalebone is principally used, nowadays, in the manufacture of whips and corsets. Umbrella frames used to be made altogether of whalebone, but since its scarcity and high price, steel is mostly used for this purpose. Whalebone hats and whalebone ribbon have just come into vogue. The former look very beautiful and are very comfortable on the head.—Boston Transcript.

Words of Wisdom.

Whatever is obtained by deceit cheats no man as much as the getter.

We lose the peace of years when we hunt after the rapture of moments.

An elevated purpose is a good and ennobling thing, but we cannot begin at the top of it.

If you would keep a book and daily put down the things that worry you and see what becomes of them they would be of a benefit to you.

It is not well to give up the battle after a single defeat. Some people are totally discouraged by a disappointment, while others are so enraged by it that their strength and persistency are doubled.

The liberal reward of labor, as it is the necessary effect, so it is the natural symptom of increasing national wealth. The scanty maintenance of the laboring class on the other hand is the natural symptom that things are at a stand or going backwards.—[Adam Smith.

Nothing so assuages our feelings, even in the bitterness of parting by death, as the consciousness of having left nothing undone, little or great that lay in our power to bring a smile to the face or a cheerful feeling to the heart of those who have gone before us.

Though it be but a trifle—even a flower by the wayside, if it have beauty and fragrance—pluck it and hand it to your fellow-traveler, for if you wait to do great things for him the may have fallen from your side and disappeared forever before you have done aught to gladden his heart.

What are all regrets compared with the anguish of having parted from a friend—perhaps from our best beloved—with unkind and cruel words? It may have been those words were uttered carelessly, lightly, as the wild and wanton breezes weeps by; but they leave a pain, as the breeze leaves some scattered rose-leaves to mark its track.

Grasshoppers as Food.

In the Sierra and Martis valleys Indian huts can be seen, and in and around them are congregated the warriors and squaws of the tribe, their sisters, cousins and their aunts, all intent upon the accomplishment of the grand result. As usual, the squaws do the work while the noble lords loll upon the green sward, smoke their pipes and dreamily and lazily gaze upon the countless myriads of buzzing hoppers that fill the air and devour the vegetation. The squaws, carrying queer cone-shaped baskets of great capacity, scoop the grasshoppers with a fan-shaped implement into their large baskets, and when loaded carry the wiggling mass of insects to camp and then prepare them for food. The grasshoppers, killed and subsequently dried, are mixed with mashed pine nuts and cracked wheat, and make into bread, most delicious to the palate of the Washoe. Visitors at the camp are always invited, in accordance with Indian hospitality to partake of the compound, and great is the astonishment of poor Lo at the disgust expressed by the white man for food of this kind. To the limited mind of the Indian, it is incomprehensible that any one should reject food which in his vernacular is defined as being "muchee good."

THE DEERING!

First Born of all the Twine Binders,

Views with pleasure the efforts of its children to emulate the virtues of their progenitor.

We work for no blue ribbon.
No competition fearing.
We rest our cause entirely upon
The merits of the Deering.

We were the first to bind with wire.
Perfection ever nearing;
Old foggy machines got left behind,
When farmers saw the Deering.

Probably no harvesting machine has stood so confessedly at the head of its class as the Deering Twine Binder stands to-day. Acknowledgements of its supremacy have come from all quarters, not merely from those who use them, but even competing agents and manufacturers are forced by their own convictions to confess its admirable qualities.

The many reasons why a sensible, economical farmer selects the DEERING in preference to all others:

1st. Because in the field no Binder has been so reliable, so free from breakages.

2d. The season of 1882 was one Grand Triumph for the Deering. In spite of the tangled and fallen condition of the grain, it picked up and bound it cleaner and more perfectly than could have been done by hand.

3d. In field trials and at fairs it has been universally successful, carrying off more prizes than any other machine made.

4th. It was the ONLY Binder last Harvest that separated every sheaf in the worst tangled grain.

5th. The binding is entirely automatic, requiring no attention for operation, no foot trip to operate, no moving the binder backward and forward to find the grain, no movable disc to hunt for the bundles to be tied, but all the grain goes to its proper place and is bound in neat round sheafs of exactly the same size.

6th. Every sheaf is tightly compressed first, and then tied in a firm unyielding band of twine.

7th. There is no strain whatever on the twine in tying.

8th. ITS NEW KNOT-TYER CONTAINS LESS PIECES OF CLOCK-WORK THAN ANY OTHER SERVICEABLE BINDER MADE, thus enabling a farmer's daughter of 12 years to operate the Harvester and Binder as readily as she could a skipping rope.

9th. There is no reel made that has so wide a scope of adjustment as the Deering Binder Reel. It can be placed in over one hundred different positions while in operation.

10th. The Deering Binder is the most durable and at the same time the lightest draft.

11th. In its manufacture only the best materials are used and the most skilled workmen are employed, therefore it does not get out of repair.

12th. The Harvester can be raised and lowered and tilted on the main and grain wheel in a greater distance than any other in the field.

13th. The Deering has been often tried, never denied, and ready and willing to be tried again.

It has many improvements for 1883, and is by all odds the best finished machine in the market. It is sold exactly on its merits, and its agents do not resort to dishonorable acts to make sales.

J. R. CAIRNS & SON, Tecumseh, Mich. Jackson, Mich., April 30, 1883.

GENTLEMEN—Replying to your favor of 28th inst., permit me to say that I am surprised that you or any intelligent men whatever, would notice for a moment the story told by your competitors that all the Deering Binders sent into Michigan this year were 1882 machines painted over. Surely your competing Binders must be without any substantial merits to recommend them to the farmers of Lenawee county, if their agents are obliged to resort to such dirty work as this in order to make their sales.

You are hereby authorized to use my name at any and all times to pronounce such statements as wilfull and deliberate falsehoods, told by men who know they are lying when they peddle such stuff.

So far from this being the case, Mr. Deering is now running his shops on his twelvth thousand for 1883, double the number of any other manufacturer. Is it likely or probable that he would build so many if he had been forced to carry over the amount stated by your competing friends, or even one-half, or one-fourth as many.

The truth of the matter is, Mr. Deering has not been able to fill all his orders at any time since he has commenced building his prevent perfect binder; and now with his force turning out 300 of those new knotters every day, he can't begin to fill his orders. I am waiting now for machines for Michigan, where orders were sent in three weeks ago.

As to our new knotter being an experiment, I ask you as a candid man, if it is at all reasonable, or to be thought of for a moment, that Mr. Deering, knowing that he had already the best binder in the world, would invest $150,000 in putting this knotter on 15,000 binders if it was only an experiment. No, indeed it has been thoroughly tested in every possible condition of grain in the heavy straw of 1882, and the green wheat in Texas in 1883.

We warrant it the best knot-tyer for Binders now known.

Now in conclusion, allow me to suggest that you will not under any circumstances, and I know you are too far above such, resort to the dirty, slimy work, by which some machines are forced on the market. Mr. Deering has, by twenty five years of straightforward, honorable conduct, built up one of the finest industries in the United States, and cannot afford to wreck it by conducting his business in an unbusiness-like manner such as you speak of. He can, and will meet all honorable competition, but when it becomes necessary to resort to trickery and very questionable methods, to sell his machines, he will withdraw them from the market and retire from their manufacture.

Very Truly Yours,

The Pleasures of Business.

No human mind is contented without occupation. No human soul is satisfied without an aim or purpose in life. The greatest success in life consists not in the mere accumulation of riches, but in being able to acquire wealth with a disposition to apply it in such a manner that it shall be a blessing and comfort to others—not in the mere giving away of money, but in putting people in a way to labor and help themselves. There is no pleasure in oppression. There is no joy in grinding and exacting gold from the poor; but there is a great deal of genuine satisfaction in being able to offer steady and honorable employment to the many willing hands that have nothing to do. One of the greatest enjoyments of the prosperous business man [illegible] to concerningly provide for the many employes in his house or manufactory. In doing this he is fulfilling his obligations to society; he becomes a useful and honored citizen; business to him is a real pleasure; he enjoys his successes, when they are fairly won, because he feels that he deserves them.

When a business man has the right kind [illegible] tion, he feels a just and worthy pride in his prosperity, he is pleased with the respect and gratitude of those whom he directs and controls in the management of his affairs, and he feels that in benefitting himself he is conferring a favor upon others. —Criterian.

Exterminating Vermin.

A correspondent of the American Agriculturist says, regarding the best means of exterminating vermin on poultry and hogs: Kerosene and lard are as essential in the poultry house as soap and water in the nursery, and I would as soon think of going without the latter as the former. I never see the sign of a louse unless we are careless and neglect the remedy, or rather the preventive. I do not wait until the chicks are ten or twelve days old, for by that time the mischief would be done; but I begin the fall before, and all through the winter, once in two or three weeks, rub the roosting poles with a mixture of lard and kerosene, half and half, and put it on the corners of the nest boxes. When I set a hen I use new, soft, clean hay, and on each corner of the box pour clear kerosene; it must not touch the eggs. If very late in the season, it will be best to repeat this a few days before hatching. I take the chicks out as fast as they are dry, and keep by the kitchen stove in a basket under a woolen blanket one or two days. Then each chick's head is rubbed with the anti-louse mixture, and any stray insect that may have lain in wait in some unguarded spot will never obtain a meal from that chick. Care must be taken not to put on too much, or it will run into the eyes.

New Ballot-Box.

It is said a man in Newton, Mass., has invented and patented a ballot-box that he claims is fraud-proof. If this is the case he has struck a valuable thing, that as the ancients used to say, "will fill a long felt want." The box is a very simple one, and works as follows: The ballot is put in at the top, through a small slit, and then passes between two rollers, on the largest of which is a canceling stamp. After the ballot is canceled it falls into the bottom of the box, the receptacle for the ballots. The ballot is drawn between the rollers by the turning of a crank, and when it is turned a bell rings to call attention to the fact that the box is in operation. A register is attached, which shows correctly the number of ballots that have passed into the box. The ballots can be removed from the box at any time while voting is in progress, and be counted; but when they are taken out the canceling stamp is changed, so that every lot removed from the box will bear a different stamp. If two or more ballots are put in at once, only one is canceled, and the register will indicate that only one ballot has been cast. The number of votes must agree with the number indicated by the register, and, if they do not agree, it shows that fraudulent votes have been cast.—Detroit Free Press.

The accidents that arise to ordinary balloons almost always occur in the descent, which, if the wind is high, requires great care and skillful management. In this case the propelling power would be most especially useful; the aeronaut could choose his place of landing with precision, and, by turning his head to the wind, he could avoid the dragging which is so dangerous, and which has so often brought a fatal termination to balloon voyagers. The worst conjecture conceivable would be a breakdown of the propelling machinery at a time when it was wanted to aid the descent in a gale. But the risk of such a break-down could be made very slight by ordinary mechanical precautions.

On the whole, there can be no good reason to believe that the dangers would be more formidable with this than with other kinds of locomotion, and when we remember the frightful casualties that so frequently now occur in land, river and sea traffic, and consider how many of their causes would be absent in the free paths of the air, we may probably even venture to assert that balloons would be the safest as well as the pleasantest mode of traveling.

As a set-off against all this, however, there is one great objection to aerial locomotion, namely, the uncertainty it must always be liable to in consequence of the effect of the wind. We must not ignore this; on the contrary, we will endeavor to estimate its exact value. We will assume that we can steam through the air in any direction at the rate of thirty miles an hour; but this will only count for useful locomotion in a dead calm; if there is any wind, by carrying the balloon along with it, it will clearly influence both the effective direction and the effective speed.—Dr. Wm. Pole, in Fortnightly Review.

Laughing off a Duel.

"Speaking of the Cash-Shannon duel," said the exchange fiend, putting his feet in the waste-basket, "we need a few men like Judge Dooley. He laughed out of duels with an audacious wit that compelled even the admiration of his enemies. You remember he said, when they threatened that if he didn't fight his name would fill the columns of a newspaper, that he would rather fill ten newspapers than one coffin. Once he went on the field with a man who had St. Vitus's dance. His opponent, was standing at his post, his whole frame jerking nervously from his malady. Dooley in the soberest manner, left his post and cutting a forked stick stuck it in the ground in front of his opponent.

"What does this mean?" asked his opponent.

"Why," says Dooley, "I want you to rest your pistol in that fork, so that you can steady your aim. If you shoot at me with that hand jerking so, you'll pepper me full of holes at the first fire."

"Then there was a laugh all around, and the duel was put off without a day."

Paying for his Whistle.

Not many years ago, when a lofty building was on the point of completion, the mason was in the habit of whistling to the laborer who attended him whenever he wanted a fresh supply of mortar and, as the scaffold on which he wrought was rather small, this occurred very often during a day's job. A joiner, who was fitting in a window immediately underneath, noticing Pat answer dutifully to every call from the mason, thought of playing a trick on him by imitating the whistle, and thus brought him up with a hodful of mortar when there was no room for it. The mason told Pat that he had not whistled, so he had no other alternative than to trudge back with his load. This having occured the third time during the day, Pat thought he would watch to hear where the whistle came from.

He had not watched long with the hod on his shoulder when he heard the identical whistle underneath where he stood, and, leaning over, he saw the head of the joiner protruding out of the window immediately below. Pat, without more ado, emptied the hod right over the whistler's head. The joiner yelled and sputtered while attempting to clear himself from the adhesive mass; and, in the midst of his confusion, heard Pat above shouting at the top of his voice: "Whistle when you want some, more mortar."

How to Keep Healthy.

Do not neglect ventilating your bedrooms when the weather becomes cold. In the morning hoist the windows, take off the bed-clothes, shake and stir the ticks, turn the upper one over the footroll. This will prevent the impure odors penetrating further, and they will escape faster while the bed is warm, and you will not have to wait for the beds to air when you are ready to make them.

In hot weather we sleep with all the windows open, but do not allow the wind to blow directly upon us. In the coldest nights of winter we only leave the doors open connecting with other rooms. On no account sleep in tight rooms without at least a crack to admit of pure air. Plenty of fresh air gives health, strength and elasticity to the lungs and body.

Keep the pores of the skin open, to let the impurities pass out freely, by washing the body once a week in winter and oftener in summer. Have the room warm, bathe quickly and wipe dry, and you will not feel chilly if it has been done properly. If all the clothing worn by day were aired while we sleep in other garments, much health and comfort would be added to life. One-third of our lives is spent in our sleeping-rooms. Do be particular about them. Let them be large, dry and pleasant.

A Boy Again.

Sometimes an old man becomes a boy again, though too smart to drop into his second childhood. An illustration of this pleasant tendency was given, not many months since, by an old man worth several millions.

He was in the habit of prowling around the office of the insurance company in which he was a director. One morning, as he was thus investigating, he happened to come across the dinner-pail of the office-boy. His curiosity led him to take off the cover. A slice of home-made bread, two doughnuts, and a piece of apple-pie tempted the millionaire's appetite. He became a boy again, and the dinner-pail seemed the one he had carried sixty years ago.

Just then the office boy came in and surprised the old man eating the pie—he had finished the bread and the doughnuts.

"This is my dinner you're eating!" exclaimed the boy, indignantly.

"Yes, sonny, I suspect it may be—it's a mighty long, long, for all that, I've not eaten so good a one for sixty years."

"There," he added, as he finished the pie, "take that and go out and buy yourself a dinner, but you won't get as good a one." And he handed the boy a five dollar bill.

For days the old man kept [illegible] the glass dinner he had eaten from the boy's pail.

There are two pairs of eyes in man; and it is requisite that the pair which is beneath should be closed when the pair which is above them perceive; and that when the pair above is closed, that which is beneath is opened. The lower eyes see only surfaces and effects, the upper eyes behold causes and the connection of things. And when we go alone, or come into the house of thought and worship, we come with purpose to be disabused of appearances, to see realities, the great lines of our destiny, to see that life has no caprice or fortune, is no hopping squib, but a growth after immutable laws under beneficent influences the most immense. The church is open to great and small in all nations; and how rare and lofty, how unattainable, are the aims it labors to set before men! We come to educate, come to isolate, to be abstractionists; in fine to open the upper eyes to the deep mystery of cause and effect, to know that though ministers of justice and power fail, Justice and Power fail never. The open secret of the world is the art of subliming a private soul with inspirations from the great and public and divine Soul from which we live.—[Emerson.

Did you ever notice a poor chap that stands in the first picture in the almanac, with the fish and sheep and scorpions and bulls and twins, etc., around him? Did you ever notice that he was naked and had nothing in his stomach? Well, that poor fellow used to edit a paper, and didn't exact pay in advance for subscriptions.

"The Trapper's Last Shot."

He was probably christened James, but is always Jim now, and, along with the greater part of his christened name, he has almost entirely lost his surname. If he had been a few shades lighter, he might have been "Colored Jim," but black being the absorption of all colors, this name would not fit him, so he is known, wherever known at all, as "Nigger Jim." He is an expert trapper and fisherman, but, rather oddly, considering these gifts, a poor marksman. For years he lugged about a carried in his soul an ancient flint-lock Queen's arm, so cloudy in its action that it would kill quicker with only a charge of powder, so fine and yet so nearly brought home any spoils of shot or ball. [illegible] however, he made a very telling shot. It was on an October morning, and he was paddling his light, trapping skiff up the channel for Wonakakatuk's lake as silently as any Indian could, when, as he rounded a bend, he saw through the tall stalks of the wild rice at least a dozen ducks sitting among the lily-pads in the edge of the channel, not six rods from him. Here was his long-desired chance, and no sooner did he descry them than a backward stroke of his paddle stopped the headway of the craft just before she poked her sharp nose in sight of the unsuspecting foul. Then he laid the paddle in the boat without the slightest noise, and as silently lifted from her resting-place his old gun whose true inwardness at that moment consisted of all the powder in her owner's possession and a handful of B B shot, both wadded with a half-pound or so of waspnest. He cautiously thrust her muzzle through the rice stalks, cocked her without a tell-tale click of the ponderous lock, set the breech-plate firmly against his shoulder, laid his cheek to the stock, took such long and deliberate aim that a spider, setting his snare among the rusty barrel before Jim, shutting both eyes, set his teeth, and with a sturdy pull unhitched. There was a dazzling flash in the pan, as if a kettle full of lard had caught fire, and then the noble weapon belched forth a horizontal column of flame and smoke, kicked Jim and his skiff half the boat's length astern, and gave a roar that went bellowing down the creek, across the lake, and was tossed back and forth from Split Rock Mountain to Shellhouse for five minutes before it lost its voice. When Jim got his eyes opened and his wits gathered, he peered through the eddying smoke and saw—not a feather raised, not one wounded duck fluttering its last, but some riding unconcernedly with their heads knocked off and some keel up in a quarter-acre of fine splinters. Then up rose two Boston men from among the rushes, and the fire and smoke and uproar and vicious recoil of Jim's gun were as nothing to the vials of wrath which they poured out upon his early, devoted head. Never was such paddling done on these waters as Jim did till he put half a mile of Wonakakatuk's channel seething with his rapid strokes, between himself and the scene of bloodless slaughter. Then he shoved his boat into the rushes and skulked ashore. Next day he offered his gun for sale, giving as a reason that she burned so much powder no poor man could afford to keep her. He effected a sale at $1.50, and has done no duck-shooting since. He says, with emphatic shakes of the head, "Any man that'll try to fool ducks with them wooden images will steal sheep! Yes sir, 'course he will!"—Forest and Stream.

Out-Door Air and Exercise.

The surest of all natural prophylactics is active exercise in the open air. Air is a part of our daily food, and by far the most important part. A man can live on seven meals a week, and survive the warmest summer day with seven draughts of fresh water, but his supply of gaseous nourishment has to be renewed at least fourteen thousand times in the twenty-four hours. Every breath we draw is a draught of fresh oxygen, every emission of breath is in evacuation of gaseous recrements. The purity of our blood depends chiefly on the purity of the air we breathe, for in the laboratory of the lungs the atmospheric air is brought into contact at each respiration with the bloods of the venous and arterial systems, which absorb it and circulate it through the whole body; in other words, if a man breathes the vitiated atmosphere of a factory all day and of a close bedroom all night, his life blood is tainted 14,000 times in the course of the twenty four with foul vapors, dust, and noxious exhalations. We need not wonder, then, that ill-ventilated dwellings aggravate the evils of so many diseases, nor that pure air should be almost a panacea.

Out-door life is both a remedy and a preventive of all known disorders of the respiratory organs; consumption, in all but the last stage of the deliquium, can be conquered by transferring the battle-ground from the sick-room to the wilderness of the next mountain range.

Asthma, catarrh, and tubercular phthisis are unknown among the nomads of the intertropical deserts, as well as among the homeless hunters of our Northwestern Territories. Hunters and herders, who breathe the pure air of the South American pampas, subsist for years on a diet that would endanger the life of a city dweller in a single month. It has been repeatedly observed that individuals who attained to an extreme old age were generally poor peasants whose vocations required daily labor in the open air, though their habits differ in almost every other respect; also that the average duration of life in various countries of the Old World depends not so much on climatic peculiarities or their respective degree of culture as on the chief occupation of the inhabitants; the starved Hindoo outlives the well-fed Parsee merchant, the unkempt Bulgarian enjoys an average longevity of forty-two years to the West Austrian citizen's thirty-five.—Dr. Felix L. Oswald.

Russian History in Brief.

The area of the Russian Empire is 8,331,004 square miles. The population, including Poles, Finns, Caucasians and Asiatics, is 85,685,945. The area of Russia proper is 1,881,216 miles, and its population 65,704,559. No other country in Europe has as large territory or as many inhabitants. The late Czar ascended the throne March 2, 1855, after the battle of Balaklava and Inkerman, and in the midst of the siege of Sebastopol. His reign was exactly twenty-six years and eleven days in duration. His father, Nicholas, reigned thirty years (1825-1855), and his great-uncle, Alexander I., twenty-four years (1801-1825). There have been but three Czars of Russia in this century. Alexander III. was born, 1845. The last Czar of Russia who met his death at the hands of an assassin previous to the late Emperor, was Paul, the son of the famous Catharine (1796-1801.) Spite of the repeated attempts upon the lives of the rulers of Russia, the average length of reigns in that Kingdom has been greater than in most other countries of Europe.

THE WORLD RENOWNED
WALTER A. WOOD
NEW IMPROVED BINDER.

M. E. Conklin, Agent.
TECUMSEH, MICH.
1883. . FOR THE SEASON OF 1883.

There has been already sold 439,554 of these Machines.

This record, more than anything we can assert or claim for the merits of the WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES, should commend them to the favor of the Farmer.

The evidence of the success of our machines, and of their unrivalled superiority in merit and public favor, does not rest upon any bare assertion of ours, but upon facts, and these facts are uncontrovertible. We have always maintained, and do still maintain, that the best possible test of merit in Harvesting Machines is their long-continued success in practical use, and upon this standard we have ever been and still are content to rest our claims to public favor.

It is a well attested fact by all who use them, that the Wood Machines require far less repair than any other machine in use. No other Binder or Mower is as durable and free from breakages.

The Wood Twine Binder as now made retains those meritorious features which have rendered it UNAPPROACHABLE BY RIVALS in the past, and which are already familiar to the farming public, and also contains such RADICAL IMPROVEMENTS as will certainly place it ANOTHER LONG STEP IN ADVANCE of all competition. In the family war of the different machine manufacturers the Wood has come off victorious and remains master of the field.

The manufacturers have followed up the new binder, during the progress of the harvest of 1882, through grain fields without number, from one end of the United States to the other, from Texas to Dakota, from Virginia to Vermont, and even as far north as Prince Edward Island in the British Dominions—where the latest growing grain crops are to be found—and the results of this close and protracted inspection have fully warranted the representations made, strong though they be.

There has been various improvements of importance in the details of both the Harvester and Binder for 1883. All we ask is for the farmers of this vicinity to examine the Walter A. Wood Machines before placing their order, and we have no fear as to the result, as it is conceded by all that it is the most perfect machine in all its details, manufactured.

ASK FOR THE WALTER A. WOOD, AND TAKE NO OTHER.

That Dudus Americanus.

Springfield Union: The frequent postponements of the Chase coronation from the last Tuesday in June till the 5th of July remind us of a story, as the late Abraham Lincoln would say. Not very long ago one of our progressive business men was observed one day by his acquaintances to be in a particularly jolly frame of mind. "What's up, old fellow, got an uncommonly fat contract somewhere?" was the question of one of his business friends. "See here," was the reply, opening his mouth to its full width, "I've been to the dentist's and got 'em all fixed up. Ought to have done it long ago, but I thought I ought to do for something and didn't want the bother of it if I did. But it's all done now and I am mighty glad it's over." Alexander no doubt dreads coronation day more than the townsmen did the dentist's chair and if he ever plucks up courage enough to put the thing through he will be "mighty glad" if he gets safely through it.

The Dudus Americanus.

New York Sun: The Dudus Americanus, or American dude, has of late been the subject of much scientific inquiry. Yet little light has been thrown upon his origin and development. There is no use consulting a dude himself on this subject, because his mental horizon is so limited that he does not even know he is a dude. To paraphrase one of the Sun's poets:

> Was ever sleeper who could tell
> The time when sleep upon him fell?
> Was ever dude who understood
> The moment he became a dude?

It is held by many that the dude is the descendant, through a long course of evolution, of the dodo, because of the similarity in mind and because the dodo strutted about as though it were pleasing to look upon, whereas it was ridiculous in appearance. Moreover, the dodo is described as "stupid and incompetent." These points certainly favor this theory, but one objection has been overlooked. The dodo was strong, and feared by numbers of smaller species. No one, however, fears a dude. He lacks the wit and physique to harm by word or act. Consequently, the claim that he is a descendant of the dodo is contrary to the theory of the survival of the fittest.

AN HOUR AT ADRIAN.

During a short trip to Adrian last week, we called on B. S. Barnes at his furniture works, and found him prospering. He is constantly extending and enlarging his business, and seems to have struck a field of labor for which he is admirably adapted.

W. B. Mumford was selling books as usual. He is enjoying the boom which the new Wabash line gave all Adrian business men, and is well pleased with the present outlook.

James A. Eaton was found at his accustomed place behind the cashier's desk, and he too was well satisfied with the outlook for a good season's trade. Our old friend, Wm. Van Camp is now clerking at Eaton's, and we enjoyed a pleasant chat with him.

We spent a few moments at the Court House, before Court adjourned for the day. The business of the term is being expedited satisfactorily. With Judge Howell on the bench, T. M. Hunter at the clerk's desk, Sheriff Bidwell guarding the criminals, and Attorney Salsbury representing the people, the circuit court was never better officered than at present.

THE ADDISON RUCTION.

The Hudson Gazette gives the other side of the railroad war last week at Addison. Our account in last week's HERALD was somewhat overdrawn.

There were startling rumors of strikes and riots on Saturday on the part of Polack hands working on the new R. R. at Addison. One John Wynd said to be a dangerous leader was captured and conveyed to Adrian, and nearly the whole police force of the county was beseeched to go to the scene of war and bloodshed, the Adrian military being ordered to get ready to march even. Nothing like it since the frogs of old so scared the brave people of Windham. Come to get at the facts it appears that a contractor named Carrigan proposed to settle with his gang at $1.25 a day, whereas he had agreed to pay $1.50 as the men claim. He had gouged them in other ways, overcharging for board, speculating on orders. The Polacks, under the advise and lead of Wynd, who was the only one among them who could understand or speak English, determined not to settle in that way, and furthermore resolved to have nothing to do with Carrigan—hence these fears or, fears. It is said that a thief sees an officer in every bush—certainly Carrigan was scared at Wynd, and made the sheriff, prosecutor, and all the deputy sheriffs (not to say constables) in Lenawee believe for a time that Addison was to be sacked and given over to desperadoes. Wynd has been released, Carrigan has cleared and peace prevails. Moral: Do not be too quick to condemn the stranger who is within thy gates.

Hon. O. M. Barnes, of Lansing, gave a reception to the members of the legislature last week Wednesday evening. It was an elegant affair.

The runaways were so numerous last week that should we attempt to give any kind of a description of them it would take the whole paper.

We have received from Wm. Hayden copies of Sante Fe papers of April 22d, so he must have been in that old Spanish town on that day.

J. R. Cairns has a three column ad. this week on the 2d page, setting forth the merits of the celebrated Deering binder. Read it carefully and act accordingly.

All parties holding subscription lists of stock sold for Fair Association, will please hand them to the Secretary, W. B. Keyser, or leave them with A. W. Mills.

Philo C. Mills, of Adrian, dropped into our sanctum last Monday. He spent Sunday with his son, A. W. Mills, and returned to his home in Adrian on Monday.

Dr. Hamilton is painting his dwelling house, trimming out the trees and otherwise improving his premises. He seeks to have one of the finest residences on Chicago or Union streets.

Thomas H. Mosher, of Springville, gave us a call last Monday. He went to Detroit on the afternoon train to remain a few days for the purpose of buying a new stock of spring goods.

Weather wise people predict an abundance of fruit this year. The cold has kept back the buds and preserved them from being killed by the frost. We trust their predictions may be true.

A police judge at St. Joseph remarked, in dismissing a case the other day: "I shall dismiss every case of woman insulting where it can be shown that the woman first flirted with the accused."

Take the hoe and garden rake from their resting places and prepare your door yards for the vegetation of flowers, for nothing gives the air of refinement, and does so much towards beautifying a home as a profusion of flowers.

The business men of Jackson will unite in the purchase of a new street sweeper, worked by horses. The streets will then be swept daily instead of once a week as now, and merchants and clerks will be saved this exercise.

The North American Review for May contains nine articles, nearly every one of which discusses some topic or problem at the present moment prominent in the public mind. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York, and for sale by booksellers generally.

Our "Little Ones," published by the Russell Pub. Co., Broomfield St., Boston, for May has arrived. It is one of the finest publications on the face of the globe for the little ones. If you have a little one be sure and send for a copy, and you will be sure to send for it a year.

A Caro chap named Eve had a splendid time going to Dakota, but when he reached the land of no fences and of no better soil than is found in Michigan, and began paying a dollar for each meal, he sighed for Tuscola county again, and succeeded in getting back only $60 out of pocket.

John Smyth has been appointed deputy sheriff in addition to M. W. Stevens.

Be sure and attend the Jug Breaking Concert to-night. Admission only ten cents.

G. D. Perry and J. H. Osborn are the first to build a [illegible] this spring. Let others follow.

John R. Clark addressed a large audience last Sunday at Peoria, Ill., and received a hearty welcome.

F. B. Wood was elected 1st Lieutenant at Co. C's election last evening, in place of Jas. McKinney resigned.

We attended the Ridgeway sheep shearing yesterday and will give our readers a full report next week. We are unable to complete it in time for to-day's paper.

Vote Marsh has taken a position in Jim Cole's market, and now, with Charlie Kilburn will cater to the wants of all. Two better carvers cannot be found in the county.

The increasing business of Billie Moser, the barber, has obliged him to place another chair in his shop, which will be presided over by Frank Snedicor, who is learning to handle the razor and brush.

Adrian Record: A little child of Dan Coffin, of Ridgeway, lately drank so much lye, that it was feared they would have to coffin the little Coffin, but after coffin' a while, the little Coffin confessed the lye, and threw it up.

Dr. House has recently procured about 600 geological specimens, which are mostly from Ohio, Indiana and Michigan. He is having a case prepared for their reception, and his office will soon be adorned with a fine geological cabinet.

Dr. R. R. House received a telegram this morning stating that Rev. Geo. W. Hudson had been transferred from the Maine Conference to this state, and will be in Tecumseh to take his position as pastor of the M. E. church next Sunday.

A youth, just launching out in trade,
Unto a wealthy merchant said:
"Pray tell me, sir, what you profess
To call the secret of success."
The nabob's eyes with pleasure shone,
As he replied in earnest tone:
"The secret simple is I think;
You'll find it, sir, in printer's ink."

Last week we went down to Holloway to see about running a telephone line to that place, and made quite a little visit. We found every one at home and especially Erskine Wilson, leader of the Holloway band, who gave us a hearty reception, good music and plenty to eat.

The committee appointed last year to have charge of the celebration of Decoration Day, have the matter in consideration, and our people can prepare for an old fashioned celebration. Steps will be taken at an early day to appoint the necessary committees and have the work started in good season.

The law has stopped Chinese immigration, but it can do no more. As a result the San Francisco people are now paying $30 and $40 a month to Chinese servants, because even at that price they are better and cheaper than some other kinds at $8. If that is the way it works, good enough for them—both people and servants.

The Directors of the Fair Association held a meeting last Saturday. They elected E. G. Price of Ridgeway to the Directorship in place of J. M. Cross resigned. Also W. B. Keyser, Secretary, and Minor Davison, Treasurer. We will publish next week a full list of the Subscription to stock.

The scaffolding has been taken down from the tower of the Presbyterian church and the "unveiling" process has revealed a very beautiful church front, which will be an ornament to the village. The grounds are being carefully cleaned and the corner will soon harmonize with the building itself.

Abner Wilson is preparing to supply all the country round about with early garden plants this spring. He has several hot beds filled with cabbage, celery, tomato and other plants and has several hundred large enough to transplant. He has already set out 300 early cabbages himself. His plant beds will be a sight in two or three weeks.

The M. E. minister at Brooklyn, Jackson county, had last Sunday morning's sermon punctured with a pistol shot, that stirred up the hysterical sisters and set the trustees to estimating the cost of a bullet hole in the ceiling. And all because a young chap named Ernest Knight was so benighted as to take a revolver to church and fool with it when he ought to have been listening to the gospel.

Arrangements have been completed for a course of Sunday evening lectures at the Baptist church on Sacred Biography during the month of May and early summer. The first lecture of the course will be given next Sunday evening. Subject—"The Life of Adam."

Kalamazoo Telegraph: How the contractors are pushing the work on the M. & O. railroad is shown in the following from the Augusta Review: "Trees were felled in the morning, the logs taken to mill in Barry county and sawed into ties and these hauled to the road and laid on the M. & O. railroad near Augusta, and the iron was spiked on them ready for the construction train, which passed over them at night. All this was completed the other day inside of 10 hours."

[illegible] forent papers throughout the state we think our citizens lost nothing by the non-arrival of the Briggs' minstrels which were advertised to appear here on Saturday last. The following from the Marshall Statesman is a sample notice:

Briggs' operatic minstrels gave a most nauseating performance at the opera house on Wednesday evening. The audience that were obliged to sit and listen to the worn-out jokes and stale witticisms had but one consolation, that the season is nearly over and the individual members of the company will soon be forced to go in to private life.

We are informed that arrangements have been made to have that rising genius and musical wonder Blind Boone make us a call on his introductory tour. He is to begin his concerting in this state at Adrian on the 11th of this month. The parties having charge of this queer "freak of nature" and world's wonder, have already made a run through six or seven states, and everywhere the press and musicians declare him great, and say that no conception can be formed of his truly marvelous performance on the piano without actually hearing him. If but half be true that is said of him we can count on a grand musical treat. The world has never known but one other blind colored prodigy, and it is said that Boone is equal to the other as an imitator, and superior in many respects, he being a composer and a classic player.

Adrian Record: The Evening News takes occasion to educate its readers in the matter of ringing up the central telephone office, and notifies them that it don't pay to ring more than once to attract attention, as with the first jerk the brass plait with the subscriber's number flies open and after that no bell is heard at the central office. But for all the News may say, a crotchety subscriber will just the same, ring his bell, and if he don't get a prompt response, he will fly at the machine, swear, get red in the face and wind up the crank in the most savage manner, and then back up a step, with look of vicious satisfaction, as much as to say, "There, dang you! did you hear that?" But the girl at Central didn't and perhaps the war-dance is repeated, till the irate subscriber finally catches the sound of a sweet "hallo" and feels that he triumphed only by working himself into a fine fury. But there is where he made a fool of himself. He had his rage all to himself.

NEW CARDS THIS WEEK

ZOPESA AND FOUL STOMACH

SEE TO IT.

ZOPESA will cure the worst case of Dyspepsia. A single dose will relieve in a degree that shows its wonderful curative powers and its peculiar action upon the stomach and digestive organs. It is a positive and absolute cure for costiveness and constipation, acting in a remarkable way upon the system, carrying off impurities. As a liver regulator its actions are remarkable. It tones and stimulates the liver to action, it corrects the acids and regulates the bowels. A few doses will surprise you. Sample bottles 10 cents.

CONSUMPTION!

CATARRH, THROAT DISEASES, BRONCHITIS AND ASTHMA

Monroe Democrat: An agent for the Michigan & Ohio railroad is obtaining contracts for the right of way through the township of Dundee. The people of that place, however, are not sure of the road, as the Petersburg route is being worked in the same way and with results more favorable to the company. It is the intention to have the road completed by August first.

Ironing on the M. & O. is temporarily at a standstill. The crossing of the M. C. R. R. between Augusta and Bedford is unfinished and will not be completed until about the middle of next month. The force is at present ballasting the track already laid.

A report is circulating in the Battle Creek papers to the effect that the name of the M. & O. railroad has been changed back to T. & M. An inquiry at the office in Marshall shows that nothing has been learned there of the change, and it is doubtless without foundation.

COUNTY CONDENSATIONS.

The Hudson street sprinkler has got under motion.

The Hudson Odd Fellows observed the 64th. anniversary of the order.

The Free Will Baptist church of Fairfield have bought a parsonage.

Adrian people are calling for the suppression of the bicycle nuisance.

The Fairfield measles epidemic has traveled over the line into Madison.

Weston has a new brick yard which will commence operations this week.

Hudson will soon be connected with Adrian and Tecumseh by telephone.

Mrs. W. S. Wilcox, of Adrian, is at the Hot Springs, Ark., for her health.

A new bridge will be built over the Raisin near the White Mill at Adrian.

Bishop Harris conducted confirmation services in Clinton last Monday evening.

C. T. Watson has put a new engine and boiler into his tray factory at Deerfield.

A Sunday school conference was held at the Baptist church in Adrian last Friday.

Some of Clinton's young people are rehearsing for an amateur dramatic entertainment.

Wm. Wilbur of Jaspar, who is now in his 94th year had an attack of paralysis last week.

The Clinton News man rubs the dirt out of his eyes and sighs for a street sprinkler.

The farmers in the vicinity of Morenci use nitro-glycerine to clear their fields of stumps.

Ogden has got some measle seed from Fairfield, and is now planting a big crop of her own.

The Hudson Gazette says: Tecumseh prohibits fishing and hunting.—No place for Chester.

The Hudson band will give a series of line concerts to raise money to pay a leader this season.

Blissfield will celebrate Decoration Day and committees have already been appointed to have charge of the work.

The business part of Deerfield having been converted into an ash heap, the council now propose to buy a fire engine.

Ed. Van DeMark, of Clinton, has bought a village lot of W. V. Fisk and will soon put up a new dwelling thereon.

Clinton News: Clinton has a boy choir a double quartet—who give evening serenades, and all the able-bodied felines are migrating to Tecumseh.

The Blissfield Advance observes: The Dakota craze is abating considerably, and we now hear "the other side" of the question, discussed, as freely and earnestly as the former desire to "get there."

Chas. Humphrey has retired from the management of the Adrian Opera House, after having filled that position to good acceptance for twelve years. It will be difficult to find a man who can wholly fill his place.

Deerfield Record: A sneak thief stole a smoked ham from the pantry at M. H. Burnham's, one night recently. Marsh thinks the thief acted rather hoggish in taking the whole ham when he had eaten only one meal off of it.

Hudson Post: Clayton people are anxious to have a new township.—The idea is to take one mile from the western part of Dover township, and two miles from the eastern part of Hudson. A petition to the legislature has been circulated.

Adrian Press: Shall the city purchase Lawrence Park? This question is being agitated a good deal by business men. A prominent merchant says he will give $100 towards it, others have offered $50, and we think $5,000 could be raised.

Adrian Record: Tecumseh is getting mighty partjeular. No one is now allowed to fish inside its corporation limits.

That is overdrawn, neighbor. Boys and women, men and ministers are all allowed to fish in the corporation, but they mus'nt fish on Sunday—that is, unless they catch enough for breakfast the next morning.

Adrian Record: A farmer residing a short distance west of the city, has four seasons' crop of wheat on hand. The same man sold last week, a quantity of wood, the chips of four seasons, for which he will receive 32 cents per pound. He could have taken 39 cents at one time, but held on for a rise. How much has he made in holding? The barn of this man is filled with a variety of hoarded crops, all waiting for a rise probably.

Morenci Observer: Three more cases of fraudulent paint contracts heard from last Monday. One man paid $175 for what he supposed he was to get for $28; another $103 for which he was led to believe would cost him $5, and the other man was so badly fleeced that he declined to give particulars. The rascals have been operating in Chesterfield during the week, but up to this writing none of the intelligent farmers who read the OBSERVER have bit at their gilded hooks.

EXAMINED.

A German's Experience in Getting a Registered Letter.

New York Sun.

A few days ago a registered letter was received at postoffice station A, addressed to an aged German living in the neighborhood, and was given to the letter carrier for delivery but was returned to the station because its owner was not at home, and there was no one on the premises authorized to sign the required receipt. After several other efforts to deliver it it was sent to the general post-office, and the German on calling at the station and making inquiry about it, was informed of the facts and furnished with a slip of paper [illegible] that would enable him to obtain the letter on application at the general postoffice.

Armed with this document, he made his way to the big Federal building and was soon wandering through its mazes seeking for the "Registered Letter Department." Observing on the gallery a line of citizens standing [illegible] closed door of an office, each provided with a slip of paper similar in appearance to the slip he held, he fell in at the foot of the line, which was rather a long one. At intervals of 10 or 15 minutes the office door opened, a man emerged and departed, a voice called "Next" The man at the head of the line entered, and the door closed behind him. In about an hour and a half the patient German's turn arrived, and, entering the room, he found himself alone with a gentleman of professional aspect who, giving a hasty glance at the slip of paper, said

"That's all right—take off your coat."

"Take off mine coat?" Vot you think I come for? To get skated? I vant—

"Oh, that's all right—take off your coat; I can't examine you unless you do."

"Den I vos got to be examined? So? Dot's all right, I s'pose," and off came the coat.

"Well, take off your waistcoat and shirt; do you think I can examine you with your clothes on?"

"Look here, my vriend, you think I vas a thief?" You vant to search me? Vell, dot's all right. I peen an honest man, by gracious, and you don't find no shtolen property my clothes inside. I vas [illegible] search before already—"

"I don't want to search you; I want to examine you. Don't you understood?"

"No, I don'd understand him at all—but dot's all right—dere's my shirt off, and if I a cold catch dot vill your fault peen."

The professional looking gentleman placed his hand affectionately on the visitor's shoulder blade and applied his ear to his chest, listening intently; then tapped him on the breast bone and punched him in the small of the back, inquiring if it hurt.

"Hurt? No, dot don'd hurt; but maybe if dose foolishness don't stop somebody ellis gits pretty soon hurt."

"Does that hurt?" was the next question, accompanied by a gentle thrust among the ribs.

"No, dot don't hurt, but py gracious, if—"

"Oh, be quiet, I'm in a hurry, and have got a dozen more to attend to. Now, can you read this card when I hold it out so?"

"No."

"Can you read it now?" bringing it a few inches nearer.

"No, but you choost pring me out mine shag-dagles by my goat bocket, und I read him."

"Oh, that won't do; your eyesight is defective, I'm sorry to say, and you're rejected. Put on your clothes again, quick, please."

"Dot's all right. So I vos rejected, eh? vell, dot vos unnecessary, I sulppose; but it's very funny, choost the same. I ad now I've been rechected und examined, and all dose dings vot you do mit me maybe you don't some questions got to gif me dot rechistered letter?"

"What registered letter?"

"Dot rechistered letter vot vos shoken about on dis biece of paper from station A."

"The dickens! who sent you to me with that? I thought you had come to be examined. Didn't you apply for appointment as a letter carrier?"

"As a letter garrier? No. I don't vant to be a letter garrier. I haf good pusiness got by mine own self; but py gracious, I vants mine rechistered letter from Germany vat mite bruder sents me by Station A."

"Here," said the professional gentleman, opening the door and calling a messenger from the lobby; "show this gentleman to the registered letter department," and the bewildered foreigner was conducted to the proper window.

It happened to be the day for the examination, by the postoffice medical officer, of candidates for appointment as letter carriers.

Went to the Wrong Spot.

"What's the matter, Invalid?" inquired Patience, alarmed, as she hurriedly awoke him.

"A ball had me in the corner of the fence," groaned he.

He was in great suffering and she opened the medicine chest, got out materials for a mustard plaster, and the little spirit lamp to heat it with and went to the end of the car to prepare it.

"Make it hot and streng," muttered he, with great restraint preventing himself from crying out with pain.

His wife with the plaster all ready, soon came back softly, so as to not awaken anyone. The car was darkened, and all the sections looked alike, and, for a moment she was confused, but a smothered snore, which sounded just like a groan, near at hand assured her. She quickly drew aside the curtain and clapped the poultice "on the spot it would do the most good." The invalid just then poked his head out a little farther down the aisle, and in smothered tones, called, "Quick, 'Patience,' quick!"

She gave only one leap, like a shot fawn, into his section, drew the curtain, and almost swooned away.

"Great Scott! what's the matter?" whispered he.

She managed somehow to gasp out what she had done, and, presto, the invalid was cured for he shook up his whole inferior organization so hard in the effort to restrain a big guffaw, that he actually scared the pain away.

"That man, whoever he is, will be boilin' piping hot pretty soon," was his sole comment.

In about fifteen minutes the stillness of the car was broken by a volley of shrieks that raised the hair on the head of every one.

"Blank! blank! blankety of the b—k! Blank the blank! b—k of hell—k!" Hotspur Jerusha! blank! blank! Blank!"

The whole atmosphere seemed to glow lurid blue color with expletives.

An Important Discovery.

New York Tribune.

Much interest has lately been aroused in Denver, Col., and its vicinity by the accidental production of an artesian well at North Denver, a region greatly in need of an abundant supply of pure water. In order to decide whether or not a bed of coal underlies the city a boring was made, and a depth of 37 feet had been reached when, to the great surprise of everybody concerned, a great flow of water stopped the work. A two-inch pipe was inserted and now for nearly three weeks a steadily increasing volume of water has been discharged. Further experiments will be made in the neighborhood, and sanguine persons already behold, in imagination, the surface of the country transformed by irrigation.

Lincoln's "Stove-Pipe" Hat.

New York Tribune.

Captain O. H. Oldroyd, of Springfield, Ill., offers to give that state his great collection of relics of Lincoln, as soon as the state will provide a suitable building for its reception, and the legislature now proposes to purchase Lincoln's former home in Springfield for that purpose. The Oldroyd collection consists of more than 2,000 articles, ranging from autograph letters to cooking-stoves. It includes the "stove-pipe" hat worn by Lincoln on the first day of his nomination for the presidency. As is well known, when he saw the tide of the convention was turning in his favor, he hastened to Springfield. The next forenoon he was out on the common, playing a game of base ball with the boys—a game of which he was very fond—and in making a hard run to catch a ball he pitched headforemost into one of the players and shot his hat down over his ears, completely ruining it. From the ball grounds he went to his law office and from there around to the office of The State Journal, and while sitting in the latter place the dispatch was received announcing his nomination. When he was about to start home, the editor suggested that it would never do for the young Republican party's candidate for the presidency to go on the street with such a hat, and accordingly he sent out and bought a new one, leaving the old one at The Journal office. There it was picked up and went into Oldroyd's collection. The chair in which he was sitting when the news of his nomination was received is also in the collection.

BIG DINING ROOMS.

The Protruding Stomachs of New York Dining Rooms.

Cicero Hill in Chicago Herald.

Breakfast is a simple affair that requires little room, but the dinners of late in New York are altogether a vast and costly affair, so that the fact that new houses have had to build to the requirements of the era that Carlyle called "the age of the belly." Dining rooms may have always had conspicuous attention in the plans [illegible] were they made to impose upon observation, and to distend the wall lines of otherwise rectangular buildings, exactly after the fashion of that humanippoo, or high regard for good living, as is typified in the aldermen of tradition. The famed mansions that have lately arisen along the fashionable thoroughfare seem all to be alike in that one respect. So much extra space has been required for ample and luxurious dining halls that the houses seem to present fat paunches to the public gaze. Starting down from the Central Park, the first new mansion is that of Mr. Frederick W. Stevens, the millionaire lawyer, on the corner of Forty-seventh street. The dining-room extends beyond the great brown-stone palace in an annex almost as long and tall as the main building. It is equipped with a rare treasury of heavy plate, delicate china and filmy glass, and the carved hardwood furniture and row of old candelabra are not surpassed elsewhere, but the main feature of the room is the collection of Moorish saddle bags of embossed leather that pad the walls. They are the millionaire's pride. He collected them in long journeyings through Spain and Morocco. The dining-room in the new house of Mr. Kemp, the man who made millions in Florida water, is an exception to the rule as far as the manner of its construction goes, for it is like ordinary ones—a made room in the house. But it is the costliest and biggest of all the rooms. Its ceiling is made of sheets of lustrous stamped brass. All three of the new Vanderbilt houses expose their dining-rooms after the abdominal fashion. It will not be deemed an oversight if the opportunity for the thousandth description of these gorgeous apartments is not here embraced. Perhaps the best examples of the new protruberant order of dining-room construction are seen in the grand houses that the sons of the old Huguenot land monopolist, Peter Goelet, have just moved into on the corner of Forty-ninth street and the corner of Forty-eighth street. These houses are exceedingly quiet in outward effect, but as markedly rich within. In each the dining room is extended into a conservatory projection beyond the house. The dining rooms proper are finished in the French style, in white, paneled with gilt molding, inclosing oil paintings on canvas, ordered from the most conspicuous artists in Paris and in London. The effect of leaving one end of these rooms open so as to allow the tropical display of huge leaved plants and gaudy flowers in the glass-roofed conservatories to form an indefinite fourth wall, and permitting the concealment of an orchestra on great occasions, is exceedingly pleasing.

The Novel of To-Day.

Charles Dudley Warner in Atlantic Monthly.

I confess that I am harrassed with the incomplete romances, that leave me, when the book is closed, as one might be on a waste plain at midnight, abandoned by his conductor and without a lantern. I am tired of accompanying people for hours through disaster and perplexity and misunderstanding, only to see them lost in a thick mist at last. I am weary of going to funerals, which are not my funerals, however natty and amusing the undertaker may be. I confess that I should like to see again the lovely heroine, the sweet woman, capable of a great passion and a great sacrifice; and I do not object if the novelist tries her to the verge of endurance, in agonies of mind and in perils, subjecting her to wasting sicknesses even if he only brings her out at the end in a blissful compensation of her troubles, and ended with a new and sweeter charm. No doubt it is better for us all, and better for art, that in the novel of society the density should be decided by character. What an artistic and righteous consummation it is when we meet the shrewd and wicked Baroness Bernstein at Continental gaming-tables, and feel that there was no other logical end for the wordly and fascinating Beatrix of Henry [illegible] his [illegible] was polite, when being helped at dinner, to say to the host "Half that, if you please." It so happened that, at the first dinner to which he was invited a sucking pig was one of the dishes. The host pointing with his knife to the pig, asked, "Well, Mr. Hodge, will you have this, our favorite dish, or haunch of mutton?" Upon which, recollecting his first lesson, he replied, "Half that, if you please," to the consternation of all present.

A Great Timber Industry.

New York Commercial Advertiser.

Washington territory seems to be the great timber region of this country at present. Thirty years ago the first saw mill was erected. Now there are numerous towns in which lumber sawing is the main industry. In 1881 175,000,000 cubic feet of lumber were exported, and the amount sawed in 1882 is estimated at over 300,000,000 feet.

Bernhardt as a Manide.

New York Tribune.

Sarah Bernhardt's latest advertisement takes the form of a visit to a lunatic asylum, where she studied the manners and customs of the inmates, with a view to reproducing them on the stage. She had herself locked up in one of the cells where violent maniacs are confined, and then went through a rehearsal of gymnastics such as mad people are wont to indulge in.

Our Foreign Population.

According to the census of 1880, there were at that time 6,677,360 persons of foreign birth in the United States. The number given by the census of 1870 was 5,567,229. We gained about eleven hundred thousand foreigners during the decade.

The place of birth of the population was given for the first time in the census of 1850. Let us, therefore, follow the progress of foreign immigration and its increase due to it since that time.

The last thirty years, indeed, have been the great years for immigration. During the whole period from 1790 to 1850 we received from abroad only about as many people as came over in the decade between 1870 and 1880. The immigration for the sixty years was in round numbers 2,700,000, and in the ten years it was 2,000,000. Between 1860 and 1870 (the period of the civil war) there was a small falling off as compared with the decade previous, and the total reached only about 2,300,000. Since 1880 however, immigration has been even more extensive than it was between 1850 and 1860, though from 1875 to 1879, which the country was struggling with long continued business depression, it was at a low ebb. The total for the decade was about 3,000,000.

We have, therefore, received since 1790 the great aggregate of over 10,750,000 foreign immigrants, and more than eight millions of them have landed on our shores since 1850, in the last thirty years. It is accordingly easy to account for the 7,667,360 foreign born inhabitants found in the country by the census of 1880.

When we remember that these eight millions of foreigners who have come to us since 1850 are more prolific than the old native population, and that emigration is not usually undertaken except during the most active years of maturity, we must attribute to them a large part of our natural increase in population. Of our fifty millions of inhabitants they and their descendants make up a fraction which we cannot yet determine from the census, but it is unquestionably a great one—above one-fifth, probably. These immigrants of thirty years have modified our national characteristics affected our religious thought and practice, and changed many of our social customs.

And they will go on increasing, both by births and by new and still greater accessions from abroad. 1880 showed a larger aggregate immigration than we had before witnessed. If the prosperity upon which we have entered continues, we shall probably receive between 1880 and 1890 from four to five million settlers from abroad, and then at least one-third of the population of the United States will be composed of the foreign born and the descendants of the immigrants who landed here during the forty years from 1850 to 1890.—N. Y. Sun.

The Care of the Matches.

In nothing about the household does the injunction to have "a place for everything" require more strict enforcement than in the care of matches. What are known as "parlor matches" light the most readily, and are as much more dangerous than the common matches as they are more convenient. The general stock should be kept in a tin box, which is not to be opened or taken from except by the master or mistress of the house. For each room where matches are used there should be a metal match safe of some kind, and the matches are to be kept in that and nowhere else. It should be regarded as a serious offense for a match to be anywhere or for ever so short a time found "lying around loose."

In the kitchen and the bedroom, or wherever else matches are in frequent use, it is better to have the match safe fixed and always in the same place, so that it can be found, if need be in the dark. In taking matches from the larger box to replenish the safes, let that always be done by one person, and it will pay for that person to look over the matches at the time, throwing away all broken ones, and where, as is often the case, two or more are stuck together by the explosive mixture, these should be carefully broken apart, and unless two good matches are the result, rather than to put into the safe one with too little and the other with a ragged excess of the mixture, throw both away. Also throw into the fire those matches that have two or three times as much of the mixture on the ends as they should have.

These, lighting often explode and scatter burning particles in a dangerous manner. If, in lighting a match, day or night, it breaks or the explosive end comes off without lighting, do nothing else until that end is found, and put into the fire, or where it can do no harm. In fact treat matches every match, as it were, as it really is, a fire-arm, capable of dangerous mischief to person and property. Teach the children to carefully observe the same caution.

Sleep After Dinner.

It is one of the annoying idiosyncrasies of human nature to make especial war on everything that is especially agreeable. The annual jeremiades against drinking ice-water that appear in the newspapers as regularly as dog-days are very good illustrations of this, and another is the popular impression that it is very unhealthy to sleep after meals. There is nothing more luxuriously comfortable than "forty winks" after dinner; but all the old women of the world and half the doctors, those being the classes who assume to know all about what is and what is not unhealthy, wage unnecessary war against the after dinner nap. It doesn't matter that the whole of the brute creation, which is not affected with any crusading reason, offers a proof that sleep after eating is the order of nature. So it is with pleasure we read of recent experiments made by French savans which bring the cold logic of science to reinforce the teachings of the animal life around us. Two learned French professors have been prying into the stomachs of a couple of dogs, who were subjected to different treatment after a hearty meal. One was made to take active exercise, and his stomach showed that only half the meal was digested an hour after it was eaten, while in the stomach of the other, which was allowed to lie down and sleep after he had his meal, the contents was found to be in an advanced stage of digestion one hour after they had been swallowed. The moral is plain: Eat, sleep, and be happy.

TO DETECT GENUINE COFFEE.—Those foolish persons who buy ground coffee may find out whether what they buy is genuine coffee or not by the following method: Take a wine glass or a tumbler full of water, and gently drop a pinch of the ground coffee on the surface of the water, without stirring or agitating; genuine coffee will float for some time, while chicory, or any other sweet root, will soon sink; and chicory or caramel will cause a yellowish or brown color to diffuse rapidly through the water, while pure coffee will give no visible tint under such circumstances for a considerable length of time.

Whimsical Nomenclature.

THE FUNNY NAMES OF AMERICAN POST OFFICES.

There are more than 43,000 post-offices in the United States, and the whimsicalities of the American people are nowhere more strongly illustrated than in their selection of names therefor. The Southern and Western states especially furnish many ridiculous instances of absurd mental freaks in this regard. The following names, taken from the "United States Official Postal Guide" for January, 1881, display at least a remarkable variety of taste:

In Alabama we find Blowhard, Buckeye, Gil, Quintville, Hubbub, Odd Name, Rowdyville and Slimbone. In Arizona, Bone Orchard, Snow Town, Tip Top and Tombstone. In Arkansas, Oil Trough, Sub Rosa and Tomahawk. In California, Bogus, Cache Gab, Yankee Jim's and Zen Zen. Colorado boasts of Greenhorn, O. Z., You Bet and Troublesome. Baby Mine and Tenderfoot are in Dakota. Florida rejoices in Cudjoe, Scrub and Tupenhoppy. Georgia has in her borders Alligators, Cheap, Chickadee, Crackling, Crane Eater, Dark Corner, Dirt Town, Dobey, Hot House, Iceberg, Persimmon, Pistol, Rook Pile and Ty Ty. Illinois turns out with Fish Hook, Half Day, Preemption, School and Zif. Indiana adorns the list with Bean Blossom, Lickskillet, Buckskin, Dice Nogo, Folk Patch, Frog Bush, Goonover and Zulu. Odd, Unique, What Cheer, Yankee and Zero are in Iowa. Kansas furnishes Free Will, Happhazard, Og, Rattlesnake, Terrapin and Zenith. Kentucky produces Eighty-eight, Seventy-six, Backbone, Marrowbone, Devils-heel, Headquarters, Humpty, Jamboree, Nobob, Pig, Scrabble, Smfletown, Sickaway and Tiptop. Louisiana contributes Happy Jack and Jump. Pattagumpus is in Maine. T. R. and Gunpowder in Maryland. In Tennessee are A. B. C., Dabbs, Forty-eight, Hot, Zed, Zero, Skull Bone, and Calf Killer. In Texas Blowout, Gunsight, J. Bob, Jehoy, Jimtown, Nameless, Straddle, and Vox Populi. Pennsylvania donates Nine Points, Seven Points, Six Points, Seventy-six, Sabbath Rest, Scalp Level, and Shick-shinny. Nine Times and Ninety-six are in South Carolina; Seventy-six in Missouri, and

The fly eats dirt, and makes dirt, but his personal habits are cleanly. You may see him in moments of leisure, when hunger is satisfied and there is no sport forward, sitting by himself brushing and pluming his wings, with his flexible hinder feet with as much ease and assiduity as a dandy combs his locks! He is terribly distressed when he gets into the molasses or butter or tar. That he hates to get his plumage wet is evidenced by the unerring instinct which sends him driving into the house when barometrical changes in the atmosphere indicate the approach of a shower. Flies like good living; they hum when the meals are served as well as the summer boarder, and they flock to the dining-room at meal hours without the summons of gong or bell. It is useless to "shoo!" them away. Driven from one end of the table they swarm to the other. The best way to be freed from their annoyance at the table is to feed them. Arrange a sideboard for them, on which a little moist sugar is spread, and leave them to their meal undisturbed, and they will cease to disturb you, in unmanageable droves at least.

Wisconsin has been slighted in the above list. Some of her post-offices flourish like a Green Bay tree under such names as Oconomowoc, Sheboygan, Schleisingerville, Baraboo, Nepeuskun, Waukau, Waupun, Avalanche, and Bem. Bear's Eddy can put on his Red Buttes and hunt a Bear in Bear Valley, through which runs Bear Creek, and if he puts his ball in the Bear's Mouth he will probably bring Bruin to Black Earth. Boaz can Romeo with Aurora in Arcadia, or stay at Home, as he prefers. Angelica can be found in Shawano county. Buttes des Morts (Hills of the Dead) is quite a distance from Death's Door and also from Kinnick-Kinnick. Zavis and Zoar end the list.

The Intensity of Arctic Cold.

The chronicler of Lieut. Schwatka's expedition in search of the remains of Sir John Franklin records some interesting facts regarding the great cold of Arctic regions. The lowest temperature met with by the company was 103 degrees below the freezing point, or seventy-one degrees below zero Fahrenheit, a degree of cold almost impossible to imagine by the people of more temperate climes. The effects of such intense cold upon the human system were not so marked in the case of the lieutenant and his companions as might be supposed, and even during the month in which the average temperature was sixty-five degrees below zero, the health of the party remained unimpaired. The men adapted themselves as much as possible to the habits of the natives, feeding largely upon blubber and fat meat, by which the vital heat was sustained. Plenty of game was found by the adventurers who were able to secure with their repeating rifles enough reindeer at one time to last them for several days. The difficulty of approaching these animals was very great, for in the still cold air the step of a man upon the snow could be heard two miles away, and the grating of sledge runners resounded like the clothing of tempered steel. It was not an easy matter to keep guns in working order in this climate, for at sixty and seventy degrees below zero, strong oak and hickory would break like icicles, and all lubricants hardened and interfere with the working of the locks. When the guns were brought into the warm atmosphere of the huts to be cleaned, they would at once become coated with moisture, and every part had to be carefully dried and wiped, lest the hunter, on stepping into the cold air again, would find a useless block of ice in his hands. A bottle of whisky which was in the stores was congealed to the consistency of thick syrup by the intense cold, and the cup from which one of the travelers essayed to drink, actually froze to his lips. The low temperature of this latitude permitted some of the Esquimaux to practice a terrible revenge upon some wolves which had attacked them. They set upright in the ice several keen, knife-blades, and covered them with blood. These the wolves licked, slicing their tongues, but being prevented by the cold from feeling the wounds at the time, and their own warm blood tempted them to continue until their tongues were so scarified that death was inevitable.

A New York clergyman in a lecture on "Modern Courtship," told his audience that young ladies and gentlemen should be entirely frank in their courtship; they should describe to each other their weak points. Many of the young people of his audience concluded to take his advice, and the result was that twenty-two engagements were broken between the young men and women of that neighborhood.

Dishonest Men Value Honesty.

A young man came one day with a case of conscience. He was corresponding clerk in a flourishing house of business. His employers had begun to direct him to write letters to customers containing statements which he and they knew to be false. He had objected and they said; "We are responsible for these statements; it is nothing to you whether they are true or false." I said to him, "Do they sign the letters, or ask you to write them in your name?" As soon as the question had left my lips I saw that, if there were a difference, both would be wrong, and I hastened to tell him so. He said, "I have to sign them with my name, pro. Messrs. Blank." I said, "Your case is perfectly clear; you must decline to do it." He said, "Then I shall be dismissed," and after a pause, "I have a wife and family." I replied, "My dear friend, this is a trial of faith and principle; you must do right and trust to God to take care of you and your family." I met him some days after. "Well, Mr. ———," said I, "how are you getting on?" He replied, "I am still in my situation; I had an interview with the partners, and told them I could not write letters I knew to be untrue. They were very angry; and I expected to receive notice, but I have not received it yet." Months passed, and he remained in his situation. After awhile he called on me, and I saw in his face something had happened. "Well, Mr. ———," I said, "have you had your dismissal?" "No," he said, "I have not," and smiled. "What then?" "A very confidential post in their service, with a higher salary, has fallen vacant, and they have put me into it!" On second thoughts these unprincipal men had come to the conclusion that a clerk who would not deceive a customer would not deceive them, and was too valuable to lose.

In a School in Germany.

We were of all ages, ranging from four or five to sixteen or seventeen years. The school was divided into three classes. The first class comprised fifty, the second forty, and the lowest thirty girls. We all met together at ten o'clock, for the quarter of an hour allotted to play. The school was kept by an old lady superintendent, under whose management were three other ladies—governesses. Two of them were French, the other German; but none of these took any part in the teaching; they remained in the different rooms for supervision only. Once a day at least, during some class, never at any fixed hour, the lady superintendent would herself come into each room, and inquire of the master how things were going on, and if any pupil was either careless or refractory, she was there and then reprimanded in presence of us all. I am afraid none of us cared very much for the old lady, one reason for our dislike being the fact of her having very long fingers, with which she was in the habit of tapping rather feelingly upon the shoulder of any one of us who might be stooping over or sitting carelessly at her desk. It was the rule of the school that each pupil should bring her desk with her. They were all regulation size, large enough to contain the books, paper, and other things which we might at any time require, and they were carefully locked in the evening, each girl taking her key away with her. We had a professor for every separate subject, and I must say they did their best to interest us in our work. The religious teaching in the school took up one hour every morning, a Lutheran minister and a Roman Catholic priest attending the pupils of the two denominations. There was a professor for history, another for geography, a third for arithmetic, a fourth for astronomy, a fifth for chemistry, a sixth for writing, a seventh for the German language only, two for French—the one for correction and conversation, the other for preparation—a master for drawing, and another for class-singing.

The Goat.

The goat is a native of the vacant lots about the city, and there are lots of them.

The goat is omnivorous. He will goat anything that he sees, and will seize anything he may goat.

His principal food, however, is play bill. He is very fond of letters.

Let us honor him for his love of bill letters.

The gentleman goat is called Billy, but he is a Billy that no policeman can handle.

The lady goats are called Nanny. This is their ewe-Nanny-mous name.

The young goat is called a kid. Kids are on hand the year round.

The goat is generous to a faun. He presents a couple of horns to everybody he sees.

In the matter of mere cash, the Cashmere goat is the most famous.

Goats are fond of the outskirts of large cities, and long skirts.

The goat wears a beard. It is called a goatee though not confined to the goat.

The goat is noted for his butting, but he never flags.

The goat is one of the signs of the zodiac signifying that he has a propensity to knock things sky-high.

He never gets high himself. That is to say, never gets over the Alpaca.

Shakespeare understood the spontaneity of the goat when he said, "Stand not upon the order of your going, but goat at once."

The goat is a wide-awake animal. He never caught napping, notwithstanding the many cases of kid-napping you may have read about.

For many years the goat was the only butter known.

Goats love to get on a high rock and sun themselves. Give them a chance and they will always seek a sunny climb.

The goat (if it was a son of Ballou) all goats do not pay out as well as he did. Bagatelle. Boston Post.

Uses of the Potato.

In France the farina is largely used for culinary purposes. The famous gravies, sauces and soups of France are largely indebted for their excellence to that source, and the bread and pastry equally so, while a large quantity of the so-called cognac imported into England and America from France is distilled from the potato. Throughout Germany the same uses are common. In Poland the manufacture of spirits from the potato is a most extensive trade. 'Stettin brandy," well known in commerce, is largely imported into England, and is sent from thence to many of the British possessions as the produce of the grape, and is placed on many a table of England as such, while the fair ladies of America perfume themselves with the spirits of the potato under the designation of eau de cologne. But there are other uses to which it is applied. After extracting the farina the pulp is manufactured into ornamental articles, such as picture frames, snuff boxes, and several descriptions of toys, and the water which runs from it in the process of manufacture is a most valuable scourer.

Sampson brought down the house, but nobody called for an encore.

"I should re-mark," said the merchant when goods went up.

A western editor says one hug is worth a dozen love-letters, and cannot be introduced in a breach of promise suit either.

The world is always interested to know the last words of a man. It doesn't care so much about those of a woman, for she has had her last word all through life.

A clock having struck the hour of one, a tender-hearted woman exclaimed "Oh, what a cruel clock." "Why so?" asked a friend. "Because it strikes its little one."

"Can there be happiness where there is no love?" queries an author in a book on marriage. Not much happiness, perhaps, but if the girl is awfully rich there can be lots of fun.

Did you ever notice how formal a man becomes after he has held a situation for a year or so? Still, it is but natural that a fellow should get stiff after being in one position a long while.

A lecturer was explaining to a little girl how a lobster cast his shell when he had outgrown it. Said he: "What do you do when you have outgrown your dresses? You cast them aside, do you not?" "Oh, no, we let out the tucks," replied the little one, with promptness.

A traveler out west stopped at a farmer's well to get a drink of water. It was warm and brackish, and the wayfarer remarked to the farmer that the well was not a very good one. "It's well enough for me," said the granger gruffly. "Then I guess I'll let well enough alone hereafter," was the traveler's rejoinder.

CURE FOR NIGHT SWEATS.—A powder known as streupulver, composed of three parts salicylic acid and eighty-seven parts silicate of magnesia, is used in the German army as a remedy for sweating of the feet. A Belgian physician, Dr. Kohnhorn, tried it efficiently in several cases of night sweating by consumptives. The beneficial effect was immediate and permanent. The powder was rubbed over the whole body. To prevent any breathing of the dust and consequent coughing, a handkerchief must be tied over the patient's mouth and nose while the powder is being applied.

The number of cows in the United States is over 13,000,000, which is six times the number in great Britian, over twice the number in France, two and a half times more than Prussia and more than there are in the countries of England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Russia, Finland, Australia, Hungary and Switzerland combined, although these countries contain four times the population of the United States. The proportion of cows to the inhabitants in the United States is twenty-three to each one hundred persons.

Travelers in Egypt are surprised at the large amount of opathalmia and blindness prevalent among the inhabitants. Want of cleanliness is the cause. An Egyptian mother, under the influence of a widely prevalent superstition, does not wash her child's eyes until eight days after birth. By that time the organ is frequently ruined. The teachers in the American and British mission schools of Cairo say that Egyptian mothers become invariably angry when urged to wash the eyes of their newly-born infants, and can rarely be persuaded to comply with a request of the kind.

HONEY AND THE PHYSICIAN.—I had taken to Edinburg, there to consult a doctor, having at last reduced my complexities to a single question: Is this disease curable by medicine, or is it chronic, incurable except by regimen, if even so? This question I earnestly put; got the response: "It is all tobacco, sir; give up tobacco." Gave it instantly and strictly up. Found, after long months, that I might as well have ridden sixty miles in the opposite direction, and poured my sorrows into the long haired ear of the first jackass I came upon as into the selected medical man's, whose name I will not mention.—Cornhill's Reminiscences.

LET THE CHILDREN EARN MONEY.—It is right that children should have their own pocket money, a certain allowance over which they should have complete control; but if they can earn what they spend by some employment brought forward for the purpose, so much the better. It is the misfortune of children brought up by rich parents that they have no sort of conception of the value of money. Its want does not teach them foresight, sagacity, forbearance, or self-denial. The child has a piece of money, and his only idea is to spend it promptly, but if he had earned that money he would not be in such a hurry to rid himself of it.

An Englishman traveling in the East, not being quite satisfied with the appearance of the mare he rode, asked his Arab servant if he was sure she got her allowance. "Oh, yes," he replied; "my countrymen often steal from one another, and rob their friends' horses; but I can always find it out if your mare has been cheated. I put seven or eight pebbles with the barley, counting the number exactly. The mare never eats the pebbles, and if any one steals from the barley he is sure to take two or three pebbles with it. If I find the pebbles short in the morning I have hard words, and they can not tell how I know, and so they give up cheating her.

A PLEASANT MANNER.—It is a pleasure to oblige really agreeable people. Some unhappy men are so organized that it is only with difficulty they can even force the appearance of politeness. Without intending it, their manner is repellant, and if they have a fare share of combativeness, antagonistic to such an extent as to make their society unsought and disagreeable. They receive favors ungraciously, and grant them in such a manner as makes the recipient regret having asked them. But the naturally agreeable person both accepts and confers a favor in a manner delightful to witness.

[No. 199.]

AN ACT to prevent hunting for game with firearms, dogs, or otherwise on any enclosed lands or premises of another in this state without the consent of the owner or lessee of such lands or premises.

SECTION 1. The People of the State of Michigan enact, That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to hunt for game with fire-arms, dogs, or otherwise on any inclosed lands or premises of another in any county of this State without the consent of the owner or lessee of such lands or premises.

SEC. 2. Any person or persons violating the provisions of the foregoing section of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine not less than five nor more than twenty dollars, in the discretion of the court, and costs of prosecution. And in case the fine imposed and the costs of prosecution shall not be paid, the defendant shall be confined in the county jail of the county not less than five nor more than thirty days: Provided, however, That no complaint shall be made or entertained against any person for the violation of any of the provisions of this act unless the same shall be made by the owner or lessee of the land or premises so trespassed against upon.

Approved May 23, 1877.

CHAPTER VII.

SEC. 7. No person shall fire any gun, pistol, or cannon within the business portion of said village, nor fire any gun, pistol or cannon in or across any streets anywhere in said village, nor fire any gun, pistol or cannon in any portion of said village calculated, or having a tendency to endanger, injure or put persons in fear, without the consent of the council, under a penalty not to exceed twenty dollars, in the discretion of the court; but nothing in this section contained shall be construed to prohibit any military company, existing under provisions of law, from firing any gun or cannon when authorized by their commanding officer.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

We have quite been for a few weeks for something to turn up, but everything seems downward. The weather is cold and backward. Wheat looks thin and spotted and all vegetation sports slow.

Hershel Miller and Ray Wiggins were struck by a falling limb while scoring timber in the woods last Friday, and quite badly injured about the head and shoulders.

Robert Orr has moved to Ann Arbor.

L. C. Davenport has moved from the Lake Ridge house onto a farm in West Milan.

Mrs. L. Osgood is visiting at St. Johns.

Mrs. J. Boland and daughter Eva are visiting at Saginaw.

A chimney burning out at John Linton's last week caused quite an excitement and considerable scratching around to keep the sparks from firing the roof.

Our school in Dist. No. 5 commenced last Monday, with Miss Louisa Hinley, of Tecumseh, in the chair.

Martin Bailey while digging a grave in Lake Ridge cemetery last Friday found some ancient pottery three feet below the surface. The shovel broke the vessel, which on uniting the pieces, was found to have been 8 or 10 inches in diameter, of peculiar design and material. Pieces will be distributed for scientific investigation. The question is now how it came there, as that ground was laid out some 40 or 50 years ago, when a wilderness, for a cemetery, and has been used for nothing else.

Trot out your big calves. Frank Beckwith has one that weighed 409 pounds at six hours old, a nice male Durham & Alderney, deep red, without a single white hair, and he will take $50 for it. Business.

THE RIDGEWAY SHEARING.

The Ridgeway annual sheep shearing was held at Britton on Wednesday of last week, the "festivities" being carried on in the barn of John Britton, where they were last year. The attendance was good although it was probably reduced some on account of the threatening aspect of the weather, and some very fine sheep were on exhibition. As they were all good we refrain from making any comparisons. Some good shearing was done, the entire program was carried out harmoniously and satisfactorily, and the crowd departed for home in good season. We give below the entries, taken from the secretary's official record, and also the record of the fleeces shorn.

I. N. Pilbeam, 3 ewes, 5 yearling ewes, 1 three year old ram, "Vick," 3 yearling rams.

A. Lijin, 2 ewes, 8 yearling ewes, 2 yearling rams, 1 three year old ram.

G. L. Oliver, 1 two year old ram.

C. E. Dubois, 2 yearling ewes, 2 two year old rams.

J. Britton & Son, 1 yearling rams, 5 yearling ewes, 2 three year old ewes, 1 two year old ram, "Young Rip."

Britton & Smith, 1 three year old ram, "Champion."

S. Smith, 1 three year old ram.

C. L. Lowe, 1 three year old ram.

Albert Holmes, 2 ewes, 2 yearling ewes, 1 yearling ram.

W. Coughlett, 1 yearling ram.

Below is a table showing the weight of the shearing.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS

Dr. Bogel has his new house nearly ready for occupancy.

The young men of Lenawee county have organized a base ball club.

Mrs. N. Spencer who has been out of health for some time was last week further afflicted by a severe attack of pleurisy, but is improving.

Almost another conflagration at Holloway. One evening last week one of the lamps in the dry goods department of B. Kelley & Co.'s was carelessly placed so as to come in contact with several boxes of goods, which were much damaged. The fire was fortunately soon discovered and extinguished.

A [illegible] election at this place for conductor by M. Sharpe. Wheat at Holloway is not growing.

Mr. H. L. Wilson has been practicing in a game of cards, having expectations of a fifteen pin of lost stone which he caught in his eye. Now he looks as tired as he has been on the war path.

Wednesday C. C. Clark and a lady returning from Blissfield were the recipients of a lively runaway. When near the blacksmith shop of Haywood's corners the horse became frightened, overturning and demolishing the wagon, but fortunately without serious injury to the occupants.

New arrangements took effect on the Wabash road last Monday. The accommodation or what is known as the "Paiz train" has been taken off, and the 11 o'clock express now is a flag train.

Mrs. M. Hoyle is daily expected from her trip to Hot Springs, Arkansas, where she has been for some time for her health.

RIDGEWAY RUMBLINGS

Alden Wickham preached at the Christian church last Sabbath morning and here in the evening.

Rev. O. Whitmore occupied the pulpit here Sunday morning, and presented a scheme for raising money to build churches in the northern part of the state, and especially in the region of the burnt district.

The only child of Corpenius Eveleth was buried last Sunday, aged eight months.

Wm. F. Pocklington thinks he understands now the folly of hiring tramps. The one he hired a few days ago has disappeared with his little boy's penny bank containing several dollars.

We are ready and anxious to take back what we said two weeks ago about John Eveleth's meat market, which has now "gone busted." At the same time we are pleased to announce that a market will be opened next week in the old Exchange by Silas Danley and Henry Pocklington.—More about it in the near future if they stick.

Now it looks as if we were to have a railroad, sure. About a dozen teams, and twice as many men, are at work cutting through the Ridge road and grading each way therefrom. The railroad whoop can be heard for miles around every evening. This summer is likely to be a lively one for an old stand town like this.

COUNTY TEACHERS ASSOCIATION.

The next meeting of the L. C. T. A. will be held at the Central school building in the city of Adrian, on Saturday next, May 12th. The following is the program for the day.

9:00 Organize.

10:00 Paper by Prof. Smith, of Clinton, entitled, "The teacher's position and some things that should be expected of him." Prof. Edgecombe, of Deerfield, will lead in the discussion of this paper.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

2:00 Music—Quartette—"Come where the Lilies."

2:15 Language Talks. Prof. Weydell, of Hudson. The discussion of this paper will be led by Prof. Wilson, of Blissfield.

2:45 Arithmetical Language. Prof. Condit, of Morenci. Prof. Whitmore will lead in the discussion of this paper.

3:15 Reading. Prof. Wickham, of Jonesville.

This exercise is followed by a recess of ten minutes. The teaching will be varied with music, a short entertainment, etc.

We hope that every wide awake teacher in the county will be present and that each one will take part in the discussions, thereby helping in making the meeting a good time and interesting one.

Santa Fe, the capital of New Mexico, will hold a unique celebration this month commencing the 4th day of July and closing the 30th day of August. It is in commemoration of the 333d Anniversary of the settlement of Santa Fe by Europeans and is to be called the "Tertio Millenni Anniversary." It will consist of a grand mining and industrial exposition of and for the Rocky mountain region. A special program has been arranged for each of the thirty days covered by the exposition. We acknowledge the receipt of a complimentary ticket addressed to the Editor and Lady. If our business and our lady will permit we shall be pleased to accept the same.

A nut for the lawyers to crack. A boy called at the house of the town clerk in a neighboring township with five woodchuck scalps demanding bounty not only for them but for seven unborn ones. Now that clerk is tearing his hair to know what is best to do about it.

BRITTON ON THE WABASH

[illegible] Britton last Wednesday afternoon and evening improved ourselves of the opportunity to look over the place and take a few notes. The depot and postoffice of course are first. They are always to be found [illegible] But here we found many other business establishments. New sidewalks are being constructed on the north side of Chicago street both east and west of the depot, and other improvements are in contemplation.

The store of Edward C. Rauch, is pleasantly located west of the railroad and contains the postoffice. John Britton is postmaster and Mr. Rauch is agent who performs the work of the office. He carries a general stock of goods suitable for a country store, comprising dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, crockery, notions, tin ware and everything else a man needs to furnish forth with. He opened his store on the first September, 81, and is now well satisfied with his past trade and the outlook for the future, but he has no notion of going west. The Dakota fever has no show on him. He also keeps in stock an assortment of ready made clothing, hats and caps, and his goods are [illegible]. Mr. Rauch is well satisfied with the outlook for a good year's trade.

Abel Parker keeps the store east of the railroad. He has a large and varied assortment of goods, such as is generally displayed on the shelves of a country store, consisting of dry goods and staple groceries, a small line of hardware, boots and shoes, hats and caps. In addition to these he caters to the inner man by a lunch department, where meals can be prepared on all extra occasions. He also keeps a look out for the health of the people by keeping a good line of drugs, which is appreciated by the residents of Britton and vicinity. Mr. Parker was originally in business at Blissfield, and came to Britton and opened his store there in September, 1881. He is evidently well pleased with his present trade and the outlook for the coming season.

The people of Britton now feel certain of securing the M. & O. road and feel equally certain that the second tourist will give their town an additional business boom, which will greatly augment its business prosperity.

The stave factory located here has been doing quite a business during the past winter. The new M. & O. road runs directly through the shop and it is doubtful whether it will be started again.

The heaviest establishment in the village is the saw and planing mill of Waring & Knight. Their main building is 26 by 90 feet with engine and boiler rooms in addition. The saw mill proper is located on the second floor and the planer, matcher, sliding saws and dry kiln below. The capacity of the saw mill is 15,000 feet in ten hours and the firm employ ten men. At the close of winter their yard contained two million feet of lumber, largely white oak and hickory, and about [illegible] of all the logs on the yard belong to the firm. They make a specialty of hard wood finishing lumber, whitewood and [illegible] and [illegible] lumber, and of [illegible] they can sell to customers cheaper than plain. They also keep on hand and for sale a well assorted stock of pine finishing and other lumber. They are now [illegible] a contract [illegible] the M. & O. railroad [illegible] ready [illegible] contract.

TOO UTTALY UTTA.

I'm called an æsthetic young man,
And wude people say I am silly;
I carway a wose and a fan
And dine on the scent of a lily;
I'm touched with the bwic-a-bwac craze,
A plaque sets my heart in a flutter;
I'm sweet and wefined in my ways—
In fact I'm decidedly utta.
Yes, utta,
In fact I'm decidedly utta.

I dress in a picturesque style,
My costume is simple and soulful;
My face wears an æsthetic smile;
That's most photo, half doleful;
I've nothing in common with those
Wude people who spring from the gutter
But pwaps too absurd to suppose—
I'm quite too decidedly utta.
Yes, utta,
I'm quite too decidedly utta.

In doing I practice a little
In front of my mirror each morning
To catch the expression and smile
That signify a people are scorning.
And when through the city I pass
I get the girls pwetty in a flutter;
Though some of them call me an ass,
What mattaks it while I am utta?
Yes, utta,
What mattaks it while I am utta?

A SUNDAY WITH THE SHAKERS.

Some of our readers have seen the Shaker service. Many have not. For the benefit of both we give a report of a Shaker meeting. Shaker Village is perched on one of the most arduous hills of Androscoggin county, Me. Miles away you can see the large stone fortress-like building where one of the two Shaker families composing the community lives. The second family's home is in a weather-stained, old-fashioned building, almost 100 years of age. It was built in 1795, and the elder said, after service last Sunday: "It's not fit for a Christian to live in. We're making preparations now to build a new one." The Shakers, in their dignified drab coat-tails, and Shakeresses in their neat, plain gowns, glistening white-pointed kerchiefs, and their scrupulously-starched bonnets, were marching from the house to the chapel when the reporter arrived. In the church the Shakers formed, standing in two squares, the males in one and the females in the other. The two divisions stood facing each other, with their hands clasped in front of them. In the rear ranks of each body stood the young wards of the community. There were three little boys of 8 to 10 years old, and half a dozen girls, apparently 4 to 14 years, whose long braided hair formed a marked contrast with the closely concealed locks of the Shaker women. The little boys' crowns were closely shaven, while the locks at the base of the head had been allowed to grow down their necks in imitation of the flowing, patriarchal hair of the aged Shakers.

Standing in this position, one voice commenced a strain of quaint song, which all took up. It was something between a hymn and a chant. The melody was strange but pleasing, and was sung by all the voices, male and female, in unison. An impressive effect was given the last chord by all the singers gradually softening the tone and ending the diminuendo in barely a murmur, at the same time lowering their hands from the clasped position to their sides in perfect harmony with the movement of the music. The elder then stepped forward to the space between the two sections of Shakers. The lines of his face indicate a man of remarkable firmness of character. The high sloping forehead, the prominent Roman nose, the unrelaxed facial muscles, his stately demeanor, and the distinct, solemn utterances of a deep musical voice, all pointed to a mind of the most positive convictions and ability of no mean order. The elder read the fourth chapter of St. John. The women and children then sang spiritedly a beautiful hymn. This and all the following hymns were given the same tremulous diminuendo, ending as before.

In the next song one common spirit seemed to move the worshipers in a stately march backward and forward across the floor of the chapel. They kept perfect time with the tune they sang, and marched with the regularity of militia, making square heels, and accompanying their march with a swinging motion of the arms and hands, palms backward. There were several fine singers among the men, and all the women had excellent voices. The juvenile Shakers seemed to enter into the services with the same enthusiasm as the veterans. It was amusing to a spectator to watch the solemn faces and attitudes of the little fellows. Not a suggestion of a smile came over their features, and, to our mind, the staidest Shaker of them all was a lad of perhaps 10 summers. He wore a loose, cherry-colored sacque and a high-buttoned velveteen waist coat. He had a fair, untanned face, and pale blue eyes. The blue veins were seen through the delicate skin covering his temples, and he had a dreamy far away look. The netlocks of light hair fell over his coat collar. He seemed possessed of a most intense spirituality, and was as deeply absorbed in his devotions as the elder himself. Some of the Shakeresses once in a while allowed a sly smile to interrupt the continuous solemnity. The Shakers take these children by adoption, and have more requests to take and bring up orphan and uncared-for children than they can comply with. The wards are indentured to them until they are 21. Then they are at liberty to leave the community and go in-into the world if they wish. The Shakers educate them and give them the best of home training.

After several marching songs, the Shakers took seats. We had noticed among them one sandy-haired young man, apparently of not more than 25 years, who wore a plum-colored coat and who sang with much unction. The young man stepped forward nervously, drank a little water from a glass, opened a Bible which lay on a window shelf, and, after a nervous twitching of the shoulders and compression of the lips, read a text from the eighth verse of the third chapter of Second Peter: "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." He then spoke earnestly for about fifteen minutes without notes, in a measured, distinct and cultured voice. The speaker's words were listened to with the most profound attention by the audience. He was William Paul, the eloquent young preacher of the Shakers. Mr. Paul has been with them about four years. He is older than he looks, having reached the age of 35 years. He was born in Scotland, and educated in Glasgow. There are few pulpit orators who have the power of clothing their ideas in such chaste and eloquent language, or addressing themselves directly to the hearts of their hearers to a greater degree than this young Shaker Scotchman. After he concluded, another song was sung. The preacher then arose again and said: "If any of our visiting friends desire to say a few words they have perfect liberty."

One of the strangers present arose and explained the recently inaugurated custom of passing the contribution box. He said that it had not been originated by the Shakers themselves, but by the outsiders who desired to see the chapel enlarged, in order that they might be accommodated more conveniently. He then passed the hat and got a liberal collection.

The elder arose and said quietly: "Let us lay aside our seats and form a circle." The settees were placed beside the walls. A small circle of singers formed in the center of the chapel. Around this inner circle the other worshipers formed in double file and marched, while all joined in the Shaker hymns and kept up constantly a swinging motion of their arms and hands in concert with the rhythm. They took a very graceful, promenade step, the women leading, and the small boys bringing up the rear. The queenly form and bearing of one woman, apparently one of the elderesses of the community, was noticed by every beholder. A handsome white silk handkerchief and the regal grace exhibited in her walk distinguished her from her sister Shakers. The sightless eyes of one very aged and infirm Shaker who took part in the other exercises, prohibited him from participating in this. Four or five songs were sung and accompanied by this strange, sober walk-around. One of the scalp-locked lads was in the file with the elder, and the little fellow both lengthened his stride and drew down his face to equal proportions with the elder.

The marching ceased, and the elder, after a few remarks, read an article from a publication called "The Shaker Manifesto," published by the united societies. The reading was followed by testimonies by the brothers and sisters. One aged, gray-haired brother said: "I'm not ashamed of the Shaker life. I'm glad I have given up the life of self and given my life to God. I want to be a better Shaker." A sister said: "I think the angels have come near unto us in our devotions. I am glad I am a Shaker. At the age of 16 I said to myself: 'Shall I serve myself or the Lord?' Shall I live a life of pleasure or a godly life?' I said I would serve God, and I feel that I have done it. It has been a satisfaction to me to escape many trials, get out of the world, assume the plain dress and language, and live a life of purity. I'm glad I did so. I know I would have been as liable as any woman in this world to succumb to temptations of the world, if I hadn't placed myself beyond them." After more marching the venerable blind Shaker closed the exercises by speaking a few words and requesting the audience to remain seated while they passed out. This was done. The Shaker service was over, when the patriarch was reverently led out of the door by a young brother.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Nebraska as it Was and Is.

It is believed that over all this vast region once rested an immense lake, compared to which Lake Superior is a mere pond. Over the bottom of this lake were spread through the ages lacustrine deposits of soil from five to two hundred feet deep. A small area on the north side of the state seems to have emerged first, for the soil is entirely gone from it. But it must have been at one time a tropic isle of marvelous luxuriance of vegetable and animal life.

In the hardened clay of its low hills are to be found vast numbers of fossil animals that have no existence outside the tropics. Here were immense numbers of rhinoceri, horned and hornless, some with two horns, some with one, and others with none. Here ranged the hippopotami and vast herds of carnivorous animals; here are found petrified turtles, one specimen, perfectly preserved, being seven feet across. There are several species of fossil monkeys. "It requires but little imagination," says Bishop Warren, "to cover the region of the mouth of the Niobrara with abundant forests, through which meandered great rivers, full of the hugest animals, while above them chattered the monkey, and flew the gorgeous bird of paradise."

Afterward the surrounding country, covered with the richest soil, arose above the waters; the climate grew more severe, and the tropical animals and birds gave place to those of a colder clime.

One race of men lived here and disappeared; another took their place, but have passed away, leaving but little trace; a third, now known as Indians, luxuriated in the abundant meat of the buffalo, but they are nearly as extinct as the two races that have sunk beneath those waves of land, "unwept, unhonored and unsung."

It seems to be a hard matter for men to conquer this continent. Whether the fourth race has gathered strength enough from allying all kindreds and bloods under the whole heavens for its conquest, is yet to be seen in the coming centuries.

The part now called Nebraska is two hundred by four hundred miles in extent, and contains forty-eight million acres. On the east flows the Missouri River; irregularly, through its whole length, flows the Platte, receiving all its tributaries on the north side.

The state has a slightly undulating surface, and has so rich a soil that after crops have been removed for thirty years from some places. It shows no sign of needing fertilization, nor will it show such need till the one hundred and fifty feet of soil has been turned into wheat or other crops. The soil most nearly resembles that of the Nile Valley, in Egypt. It is perfectly prodigal in the production of fruit. The state has twice been awarded the highest premium of the United States Pomological Society, and thereby been debarred from competing again. One apple has been grown that weighed twenty-nine and a half ounces, and one man raised in a year 14,000 bushels of peaches.

The state was admitted into the Union in 1867. All the early inhabitants came into Nebraska in the so-called prairie-schooners—a covered wagon containing all the family and their earthly effects. Finding land to suit, they first erected a house of sods, with places cut for a door and window, which made them a comfortable abode. Many happy homes were hung with tapestry of figured muslin, and whitewashed on the outside for a very trifling cost.—Phila. Sat. Night.

That the Mississippi may deservedly be called the "Father of Waters" the following data will show: The quantity of water discharged by the river annually, 14,880,360,256,800 cubic feet; quantity of sediment discharged annually, 28,188,083,892 cubic feet; area of the delta of the river, according to Lyell's estimate, 13,000 square miles, and depth of the same, as calculated by Prof. Riddell, 1,056 feet. The delta, consequently, as appears from these figures, contains 400,378,429,440,000 cubic feet, or 2,720 cubic miles; and it would require for the formation, therefore, of one cubic mile of delta five years and eighty-one days; for the formation of one square mile, of the depth of 1,056 feet, one year sixteen and one-fifth days, and for the formation of the whole 14,208,045 years.

The House Fly.

ITS CAREER AND USES—A GOOD WORD FOR A NUISANCE.

The house fly is one of the most useful of domestic appendages in the hot season, and, at the same time, one of the most annoying. Where there is the most of dirt, there it is that the flies do most thickly congregate, and thus they vindicate, to the philosophic observer, their true character as scavengers, and therefore benefactors to human kind. The amount of disease-breeding filth destroyed by the myriad armies of summer musca and more than compensates for the mischief they do, the uneasiness they occasion, or the torture they inflict in the animal kingdom. We sometimes wish the Creator in His wisdom had invented some other mode of cleaning the world than the instrumentality of these pesky little pests. Perhaps that expression, also his convenience, was the primal cause of their position in one of the links of the chain of creation. There is no doubt that meditative flies complain, and have a right to complain, of divine providence for attaching such brutal appendages as switches to the caudal vertebræ of cows and horses to interfere so seriously with their pasture privileges on the hides of these animals. To the insect world, fly, mosquito, louse, bedbug, man's body is a vast continent, fertile in good things; to the fly especially it offers a paradise of enjoyment. The unsophisticated musca doubtless wonders why, when he settles to regale himself on the sweets that exhale from the animal surface, like the odors of frying steak from a cook-shop, he is rudely jostled from his expected repast by an earthquake shake, or a resounding whack that would annihilate dozens of the fly family, if they do not skip aside, lightning-like, on the wind of the descending blow.

Thanks to his 4,000 telescopic eyes, the house fly cannot be approached from any direction without his perceiving it. To him, as well as to many other tribes of fellow-insects, light and warmth are irresistible attractions, and to each and all glass is a wonderful puzzle. The persistency with which winged insects, flies, butterflies, bees and other tribes will butt themselves, again and again, against a window pane in their mad efforts to escape the house, proves that, while they have power of perception, they possess very little reason. The window and the ceiling are favorite resorts of the fly, where he promenades at pleasure in defiance of the laws of gravitation. Microscopists give various reasons, drawn from the structure of the fly's foot, why he is thus able to cling securely to the surface with his body hanging downward. It is one of those things of which a man or an elephant can form no conception, any more than why a fish can live under water, or why an insect can dash himself over and over against a wall or a crystal pane unharmed.

Darkening a house to rid it of flies is only getting quit of one evil by adopting another, shutting out the pleasant, life-giving light. Netting and wire screens over windows and doors are tolerably effective guards, particularly to the sick room. The bed of a well man needs no such protection. When the flies begin to tickle his nose, it is light and time to get up. For the head of a bald man, the sides of a cow, or the legs of a horse, there are no human protectives against the well-nigh purgatorial torments of hungry flies. It has been recommended to bathe the bare scalp in camphor spirits, penny-royal water, or some decoction that is offensive to flies, for they have their antipathies in the herbal kingdom as well as man. The relief is only temporary. The fluid quickly evaporates, and the indefatigable battalions return with redoubled zest to the charge. Water in which walnut leaves have been steeped has been recommended as an anti-fly wash for the legs of a horse, but this also, on account of rapid evaporation, requires constant application, so that anything of the kind, however effective for the moment, becomes impracticable in use. There is no remedy but nature's, to stamp and flirt the switch, sometimes bobbed in obedience to what suffering horses must regard as a cruel fashion. To suffering woman the filth of the fly is more annoying than his stings and suction, vulgarly called "bites." He loves white paper, a white cloth, a white ceiling, and, above all things, to bask in the sun on a window pane. He leaves none of these things as white and clean as he finds them. Bunches of asparagus hung up about an infested kithchen or dinning-room become favorite roosting-places of these house plagues, especially in the fall of the year, when the cold begins to chill them and their brief summer reign is over. One of the advantages of the north temperate zone is that there are eight months in the year in which we do not have to fight flies. In summer it is good exercise for those who are too lazy to take any other. Nothing is so ridiculously helpless as a public speaker, a preacher, for instance, in the most passionate or pathetic periods, pawing the air as a mad bull paws the dirt, in the vain effort to rid his countenance of a bothersome fly.

Lawrence Sterne, destring to exhibit a perfect specimen of patience and kindness, pictures Uncle Toby catching a great bottle fly that had buzzed about his nose all dinner-time, taking the captive insect to a window, raising the sash and gently setting him free: "Go, poor devil—I will not harm thee; the world is wide enough for thee and me.' That will do for an isolated case, but what has a hungry diner to do when his hands, fettered to knife and fork, want their freedom to battle against a dozen blue-bottles? If Satan had been shrewd, and the season of the year had allowed, he would have substituted flies for boils in Job's case, when he was urging the man of Ur to forfeit his membership in the anti-swearing society by blaspheming a little. If the devil had let loose a host of hungry flies on the bald map of Job's phrenological propensities, his arms would have played wind-mill for a patient hour or so, and then he would have been more than human if he hadn't lost his temper and swore!—Troy Times.

HEADACHE.—One principal reason why women suffer more than men with headache is the fact that their life is largely in-doors, and they are not able to take so much physical exercise. There is very little complaint at summer resorts, where the windows are always open and games and excursions constantly tempt people into the open air. Girls who ride, row, sail and shoot seldom have headaches, and the same is true of those who work in the fields, as women in many countries do. Headaches might be almost banished from civilized society by a wise and careful system of physical training, and rational system of diet. We ought to be as ashamed of having a headache as being unable to read or write, or speak our language correctly.

In China all the wealthy people have their tombs and coffins made during their life time.

THE DEERING!

First Born of all the Twine Binders.

Views with pleasure the efforts of its children to emulate the virtues of their progenitor.

Probably no harvesting machine has stood so confessedly at the head of its class as the Deering Twine Binder stands to-day. Acknowledgements of its supremacy have come from all quarters, not merely from those who use them, but even competing agents and manufacturers are forced by their own convictions to confess its admirable qualities.

The many reasons why a sensible, economical farmer selects the DEERING in preference to all others:

1st. Because in the field no Binder has been so reliable, so free from breakages.

2d. The season of 1882 was one Grand Triumph for the Deering. In spite of the tangled and fallen condition of the grain, it picked up and bound it cleaner and more perfectly than could have been done by hand.

3d. In field trials and at fairs it has been universally successful, carrying off more prizes than any other machine made.

4th. It was the ONLY Binder last Harvest that separated every sheaf in the worst tangled grain.

5th. The binding is entirely automatic, requiring no attention for operation, no foot-trip to operate, no moving the binder backward and forward to find the grain, no movable disc to hunt for the bundles to be tied, but all the grain goes to its proper place and is bound in neat round sheafs of exactly the same size.

6th. Every sheaf is tightly compressed first, and then tied in a firm unyielding band of twine.

7th. There is no strain whatever on the twine in tying.

8th. ITS NEW KNOT-TYER CONTAINS LESS PIECES OF CLOCK-WORK THAN ANY OTHER SERVICEABLE BINDER MADE, thus enabling a farmer's daughter of 12 years to operate the Harvester and Binder as readily as she could a skipping-rope.

9th. There is no reel made that has so wide a scope of adjustment as the Deering Binder Reel. It can be placed in over one hundred different positions while in operation.

10th. The Deering Binder is the most durable and at the same time the lightest draft.

11th. In its manufacture only the best materials are used and the most skilled workmen are employed, therefore it does not get out of repair.

12th. The Harvester can be raised and lowered and tilted on the main and grain wheel in a greater distance than any other in the field.

13th. The Deering has been often tried, never denied, and ready and willing to be tried again.

It has many improvements for 1883, and is by all odds the best finished machine in the market. It is sold exactly on its merits, and its agents do not resort to dishonorable acts to make sales.

J. R. CAIRNS & SON, TECUMSEH, Mich: JACKSON, Mich., April 30, 1883.

GENTLEMEN—Replying to your favor of 28th inst., permit me to say that I am surprised that you or any intelligent men whatever, would notice for a moment the story told by your competitors that all the Deering Binders sent into Michigan this year were 1882 machines painted over. Surely your competing Binders must be without any substantial merits to recommend them to the farmers of Lenawee county, if their agents are obliged to resort to such dirty work as this in order to make their sales.

You are hereby authorized to use my name at any and all times to pronounce such statements as wilfull and deliberate falshoods, told by men who know they are lying when they peddle such stuff.

So far from this being the case, Mr. Deering is now running his shops on his twelvth thousand for 1883, double the number of any other manufacturer. Is it likely or probable that he would build so many if he had been forced to carry over the amount stated by your competing friends, or even one-half, or one-fourth as many.

The truth of the matter is, Mr. Deering has not been able to fill all his orders at any time since he has commenced building his present perfect binder; and now with his force turning out 300 of those new knotters every day, he can't begin to fill his orders. I am waiting now for machines for Michigan, where orders were sent in three weeks ago.

As to our new knotter being an experiment, I ask you as a candid man, if it is at all reasonable, or to be thought of for a moment, that Mr. Deering, knowing that he had already the best binder in the world, would invest $150,000 in putting this knotter on 15,000 binders if it was only an experiment. No, indeed it has been thoroughly tested in every possible condition of grain in the heavy straw of 1882, and the green wheat in Texas in 1883.

We warrant it the best knot-tyer for Binders now known.

Now in conclusion, allow me to suggest that you will not under any circumstances, and I know you are too far above such, resort to the dirty, slimy work, by which some machines are forced on the market. Mr. Deering has, by twenty-five years of straightforward, honorable conduct, built up one of the finest industries in the United States, and cannot afford to wreck it by conducting his business in an unbusiness-like manner such as you speak of. He can, and will meet all honorable competition, but when it becomes necessary to resort to trickery and very questionable methods, to sell his machines, he will withdraw them from the market and retire from their manufacture.

Very Truly Yours,

JESSE L. BERCH,
GENERAL AGENT.

COMPOUND OXYGEN NOT A DRUG

A NEW TREATMENT.

For Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic and Nervous Disorders.

A CARD.

We the undersigned, having received great and permanent benefit from the use of "COMPOUND OXYGEN," prepared and administered by Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, of Philadelphia, and being satisfied that it is a new discovery in medical science, and all that is claimed for it, consider it a duty which we owe to the many thousands who are suffering from chronic and so-called "incurable" diseases to do all that we can to make its virtues known, and to inspire the public with confidence.

We have personal knowledge of Drs. Starkey & Palen. They are educated, intelligent and conscientious physicians, who will not, we are sure, make any statement which they do not know or believe to be true, nor publish any testimonials or reports of cases which are not genuine.

TRINITY CHURCH.

A Church Corporation Which is Worth Over Fifty Million Dollars.

George Alfred Townsend.

Trinity church is a Gothic edifice, about two hundred feet long by about eighty feet wide, with a spire 284 feet high. This church was endowed by Queen Anne. It is considered the mother of Episcopal churches in America. A Dutch woman named Annetje Jans owned a farm on this island, now covered with costly buildings, which was conveyed to this church, and is the source of its riches. About eleven years ago the value of Trinity real estate was considered [illegible] and many of our steeples required for rectors and vestrymen of the Trinity corporation. From Trinity have emanated such later churches as St. Paul's half a mile further up, which was dedicated in 1766; St. John's, erected in 1807, the square before which was bought by Vanderbilt for $1,000,000, and St. George's, dedicated in 1752, all three of which were in the Trinty parish. Later Episcopal churches here have followed the nomenclature adopted in England, and we have the Church of the Holy Apostles, of the Holy Innocents, of the Holy Communion, of the Holy Martyrs, of St. Albans, St. Ambrose, St. Andrew, etc. Since 1822 no burials have been allowed in Trinity graveyard.

The Trinity church farm lay north of Fulton street, on the west side of Broadway, and was cut into lots about the year 1760. This farm extended to Duane street, and had been the property of the Dutch West India company. The famous Lord Cornberry—a man who used to dress in woman's clothes, and who inflicted fine and imprisonment on a poor Presbyterian preacher who ventured to preach in his private house—being very zealous for the Established church, gave this confiscated farm in 1705 to the Trinity corporation. The old farm-house stood where the Astor House now stands. Trinity began to lease the lots in 1760, at £8 a year. With the growth of this city the Trinity church property has become an enormous bonanza. No wonder that it has turned the head of a young priest, whose father spent his entire life holding office, and finally got to consider himself as a privileged office-holder.

There is a very small congregation at Trinity, it being a show church, having a connection with many of the old families, and it supports parish schools and other things on which it can draw with almost military discipline or a congregation. In the church-yard are buried Alexander Hamilton, Robert Fulton, the Livingston family, Lawrence, some of the Astors and many of the old English merchants here.

A Negro Duke.

New York Tribune

M. Toussaint-La-Ourille, a full-blooded negro, once the "Duc de la Grand-Terre," and financial agent in France of the Emperor Soulouque, has just died in Paris. He was successful in securing a considerable loan for the black Caesar, by promising to pay the most incredible percentage—according to one account even going so far as 2,000 per cent. He also bought up an enormous quantity of old military uniforms of all European nationalities, second-hand generals' hats, and adornments, for the decoration of Soulouque's soldiers, generals, and officers of state. He did not forget to procure, also, a considerable quantity of French brandy. Soulouque was so delighted with the success of his agent that he sent word to him that he had elevated him to the dignity of a duke. This made the man a butt for French wit, and ruined his credit. Then Soulouque became angry at the decrease of supplies, and fancying that his agent was growing careless, he degraded him into a marquis, then to a count, next to a baron, afterward to a mere chevalier, and ultimately deprived him even of that remnant of aristocratic distinction. Meanwhile M. Toussaint-Lagorille had also lost faith in his imperial master, and began to carry on his business on his own account. When the emperor was dethroned and fled to Paris, he summoned the ex-duke to appear before him; but Lagorille refused to obey the summons. He had managed to build up for himself a property of some 60,000 francs, upon the interest of which he lived with comfort and great self-complacency to extreme old age.

A Statesman's Stratagem.

Chicago Tribune.

While David Davis was dining one day at Wormley's with some friends, among whom was the slim Mr. Evarts, the conversation drifted to athletic sports and foot-races. Mr. Evarts, with a view to one of his sarcastic jests, turned to the great trunk alongside of him, from which he himself may be supposed to have been whittled off as a sliver, and suggested that such sports were something entirely out of his line. "Well, Evarts," replied Judge Davis, "perhaps you think I can't run? Now, look here. I'll bet you a case of wine I can beat you a hundred yards if you will let me choose my ground and will give me five yards start. I'm heavy, you know, and I want solid footing." Mr. Evarts was satisfied that he "had a dead sure thing," and as the evening had advanced the dignified company resolved to unbend itself still further for the sport. "Come on, then," shouted the senator, "follow me!" So away they went, down a narrow alley that runs between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets. Marching into it for a distance of five yards, while his arms touched the brick work on each side, he quietly observed: "Now, Evarts, get in behind me, and take your time. I am going to take mine."

Col. Bumgardner's Portrait.

Georgia Major.

There was an alarm of fire turned in from an Atlanta artist's studio Wednesday morning, but by the time the department got there the conflagration had been subdued.

"What was it afire?" asked Chief Ryan.

"Col. Bumgardner's portrait!"

"How did it catch?"

"I had it nearly all finished—all except the nose—and when I laid the the proper color on it she blazed up like a political bonefire!"

"And what put him out?"

"Water! water will put the colonel out at any time!"

Discretion.

When he gets a letter for his wife out of the postoffice and he forgets to give it to her for a week or so, the safest way of letting her have it is to tie it on the end of a long fishing-pole and poke it through a window to her.

Only a baby,
Kissed and caressed,
Gently held to a mother's breast.

Only a child,
Toddling alone,
Brightening now its happy home

Only a boy,
Trudging to school,
Governed now by a sterner rule.

Only a youth,
Living in dreams,
Full of promise life now seems.

Only a father,
Burdened with care,
Silver threads in the brown hair

Only a graybeard,
Toddling again,
Growing old and full of pain.

THE NEW PATENT
DUST-PROOF
Stem Winding Open Face Case,
MANUFACTURED BY THE
AMERICAN WATCH CO.,
WALTHAM, MASS.

This case is formed in one solid piece without joint or seam, opening in front only, thus avoiding the usual cap, and securing greater strength and durability.

These watches are all open face. The bezel, into which an extra strong crystal is fitted with an especially prepared water proof cement, is adjusted to the case by screwing it thereon, and thus forms an air tight junction with the body of the case, which is proof against dust and moisture.

To railroad men, travelers, miners, lumbermen and others who are almost constantly exposed and who have to make frequent reference to the watch, these qualities are of the utmost importance.

The following letters tell their own story.

VALDOSTA, Georgia, July 20, 1882.

"I sold one of your Patent Dust Proof Cases about ten months ago, and the other day it came back to me with the request to make it wind easier. On examination I found that the stem was rusty, and I inquired into the cause of it. The gentleman stated to me that he was starting some sawlogs that had lodged in the bend of the river, when his chain caught in a bush and threw his watch into about twelve feet of water, and he was about two hours finding it. When he got it out it was running and he thought all right. In about three months he found that the stem was hard to turn and sent it to me.

I can say that the watch is all that the company claims for it and recommend it to all railroad and mill men.

B. W. BENTLEY."

CLINTON, Iowa, April 29, 1881.

"I wish you would send me a spring for the Wm. Ellery Watch * * * By the way this Ellery is a watch I sold in your Screw Bezel Case to a farmer last fall. The first of January he lost the watch in the woods, and found it this week in about one foot of water. It had lain three months and over in snow and water, with but slight injury to the watch—only a hair-spring.

C. S. RAYMOND."

The above were very severe tests, and demonstrate beyond doubt, that for any reasonable length of time during which a watch might be under water it would receive no injury whatever.

We make these cases in both gold and silver, and as a Perfectly Dust-Proof Stem Winding Watch Case, Challenge the World to Produce its Equal.

A Baptist Minister's Experience.

I am a Baptist Minister, and before I even thought of being a clergyman, I graduated in medicine, but left a lucrative practice for my present profession, 40 years ago. I was for many years a sufferer from quinsy; "Thomas' Eclectric Oil cured me." I was also troubled with hoarseness, and Thomas' Eclectric Oil always relieved me. My wife and child had diphtheria, and "Thomas' Eclectric Oil cured them," and if taken in time it will cure seven times out of ten. I am confident it is a cure for the most obstinate cold or cough, and if any one will take a small teaspoon, and half fill it with the Oil, and then place the end of the spoon in one nostril and draw the Oil out of the spoon into the throat by sniffing as hard as they can, until the Oil falls over into the throat, and practice that twice a week, I don't care how offensive their head may be, it will clean it out and cure their catarrh. For deafness and earache it has done wonders to my certain knowledge. It is the only medicine dubbed patent medicine that I have felt like recommending, and I am very anxious to see it in every place, for I tell you that I would not be without it in my house for any consideration. I am now suffering with a pain like rheumatism in my right limb, and nothing relieves me like Thomas' Eclectric Oil.

One Experience from Many.

I have been sick and miserable so long and had caused my husband so much trouble and expense, no one seemed to know what ailed me, that I was completely disheartened and discouraged. In this frame of mind I got a bottle of Hop Bitters and used them unknown to my family. I soon began to improve and gained so fast that my husband and family thought it strange and unnatural, but when I told them what had helped me, they said, "Hurrah for Hop Bitters! long may they prosper, for they have made mother well and us happy."—The Mother.

Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now a well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc.,

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAY 10, 1883.

Gov. Butler is still stirring up the fossils in the old Bay state.

If Dr. Rynd had closed with editor Stearns, wouldn't it have been a jolly jamboree, though?

Adrian is putting on airs. Having established water works, she now aspires to a belt railroad and a duel.

Dr. Rynd will see Stearns again.—We have not learned who the seconds are nor when the "affair" will be settled.

Will Dr. Rynd commence a libel suit against Stearns? That question now agitates the newspaper fraternity of this county.

A Cincinnati barber committed suicide the other day by cutting his throat with a razor. He took his own medicine like a man.

Jumbo will visit Adrian June 20th. But when will the meeting take place between Dr. Rynd and editor Stearns? That is what "the boys" want to know now.

Prof. Donald Maclean has received the appointment of General Surgeon of the Michigan Central railway system to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Dr. Farrand.

The city of Adrian has the purchase of Lawrence Park in contemplation. A wise move. It would furnish a handy location for the Salvation Army, duels and dog-fights.

Herbert Spencer, in speaking of the chronic habit which Americans have of always being in a hurry, says that every American appears to have been born half an hour late and to be trying to make up for lost time.

To Dr. Rynd and Editor Stearns.—Gentlemen: When the details of that meeting shall be definitely arranged will you kindly inform us the when and the where. It will afford us much pleasure to have our shorthand reporter "on the spot."

The motion made by James E. Scripps' counsel to set aside the Maclean verdict and order a new trial has been denied. The Evening News in commenting upon the denial says:

The case will now go the supreme court, and will be fought as long as there is a court in the state of Michigan before which it can be tried.—The fight, so far from being over, is only just begun.

An exchange says that Ex Senator Thurman is preparing for the presidency by reading French novels in the original. It is said that he spends his leisure hours after dinner by taking Homer and Horace and the German philosophers in the original. But he is not an adept in packing conventions and hence his nomination is doubtful.

No wonder so many of our young men have caught the Dakota fever. This is the way that climate effects the editor of the Bismark Tribune:

The night was calm and still and the song of the red-breasted warbler came bourne upon the air with a beautiful distinctness. It sang forfully an hour, its half-plaintive, half-joyous melody coming to us as we sat in our south window in a weird and entrancing volume of harmonious beauty.

The Detroit Post and Tribune, referring to the Lansing Legislature says:

Many of the bills introduced at Lansing are of doubtful value and some are positively bad, but there is one that must commend itself to every lover of his state. It is a bill to provide for the organization of base ball clubs. If there is anything that Michigan needs for the development of her resources it is a few base ball clubs, and if the members of the legislature have to stay in Lansing till the 1st of August they should not adjourn without giving some encouragement to this important industry.

The Governor has signed the Howell compilation bill and it thus becomes a law. In giving his reasons therefore, he says:

The great merit of the work being conceded even by the enemies of this bill, I have considered only the matter of its cost to the state. After a careful examination of the facts and alleged facts, as well as a comparison with similar compilations of other states, taking into account the amount of matter, quality of paper and character of binding, I am satisfied that no state in the Union has been able to secure a cheaper compilation and publication of the laws than will Michigan by the purchase of the Howell compilation.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, May 5th,

Did you ever hear of a printer who was a miser? Scarcely, nature has a fashion of making them all after the fast come, fast go pattern, so that one scarcely believes that there is material enough left for a specimen of the opposite style. Yet a white raven of this stripe has actually been found. A few days ago an old man of sixty who gave the name of John Russell was received in Bellevue Hospital suffering from Bright's disease of the kidneys. He said he had neither friends nor money and he was accordingly placed in one of the hospital wards. When his clothes were examined however a surprise was in store for the officials. Sewed in his sleeves were twelve bank books, showing that he had altogether about $40,000 in deposit, and in the recess of one of his pockets sixty dollars in cash was found buried beneath a lot of rubbish. The man died on Wednesday morning, asserting until the last moment that he had not a friend or relative in the world. He said he had been a printer, and had worked on several local daily papers, and had once been a member of Typographical Union No. 6, from which he had been ejected for non-payment of dues. His money was turned over to the public administrator, and it will go to swell the resources of the county treasurer. Is a life such as Russell lived, full of misery, starving and exposure really worth living when the fruits are such?

The Yachting season this year will be an exceptionally brilliant one. Last year distanced all records, but this year will leave the past season behind in the annals of amateur sailing. At least three score of new vessels will be added to the lists of the clubs. Most of these are small craft built for the pleasure of their owners solely, but a few large schooners have been launched during the past few days, which are destined to show such boats as the Montauk, the Vixon and Fanita their heels no matter what weather. Notable among these are Ex Commodore Fish's Grayling, which will be enrolled on the list of the Atlantic Yacht Club, and Mr. Hovey's Fortuna. The Grayling is one of the most beautiful vessels that ever dipped her nose in blue water, her lines are the perfection of speed producing symmetry, and her cabin is fitted up with a magnificence worthy an Eastern palace. Cherry, mahogany and maple are the woods principally used. Fancy carving, elaborate brass work, mirrors, stained glass, painting, and rich Axminster carpets together make up an interior in which an æsthete might willingly breathe his so-called soul away. It is only the rich however who can enjoy the charms of yachting.

The Grayling, I suppose, cost Commodore Fish between sixty and seventy thousand dollars as she stands.—Her captain and crew will cost him $500 a month, and the cost of the pantry, kitchen and wine cellar may be safely estimated at $2,000 a month more. No yachting man would dream of going out alone, and he can always find plenty of friends willing to give him their society. Now custom demands that entertainment on board a yacht should be lavish, and such entertainments costs a great deal of money. A number of professional men have recently gone into the pastime of owning small yachts, but somehow they are all anxious that the fact should not become public. Only a short time ago, a distinguished architect with whom I am acquainted, had a sloop launched. Before the customary bottle of champagne was broken over her bow, he came to me and said, "won't you please ask the newspaper men not to mention me as owning the yacht? If the matter became generally known it would hurt my business, for people would say 'he' is one of those yachting fellows now, and hence will not have time to attend to his profession."

The arrangements for the opening of the Brooklyn bridge are all but complete, and the hotels, particularly those near the East River shore are making extensive preparations to take care of the influx of visitors which will undoubtedly come to town for the occasion. In the evening a reception is to be given to President Arthur and Governor Cleveland at the Academy of Music. There will be a grand illumination of the two cities, and fireworks will be set off from the bridge and other places. The finishing touches are now being put to the structure, and an army of painters is at work painting the bars. Seen from below they look like so many crows circling about iron posts.

Unknown to the world at large there is a mart here for the disposal of babies as well as in Paris. There are about four so-called first-class houses conducted by doctresses who studied in Europe, where infants from a week to three or four years old may be disposed of or obtained. They obtain their supply (how heartless the word sounds,) from girls who have been unfortunate, but are yet human enough not to destroy the results of unwise love. The mothers are well taken care of and the infants are given for adoption only to families of undoubted respectability.

Twine Binder.

The only Binder Manufactured having

MR. APPLEBY'S Latest Improvements.

The record this popular binder made last season in Lenawee Co., is abundantly ample evidence to convince any farmer that this is the latest improved, easiest handled and by far the most perfect working Harvester and Binder in the market. Mr. J. F. Appleby, the inventor of the Appleby Binder superintends the construction of the Minneapolis, and with the improvements of 1883, especially the double packer trip, it is thoroughly adapted to the wants of the Michigan farmer, as there is a great variation in the size and condition of our grain the Binder can be moved instantly and easily, also the raising and lowering of the whole machine by the driver in his seat.

The machine has all the valuable points that any other has and many very vital points that no other machine has. Last season we sold 32 of these machines to some of the best farmers in this vicinity and we have a good testimonial from every one of them, besides others that own other binders that have seen the superior working of the Minneapolis acknowledge its superiority over all others. No other Binders ever sold in Lenawee Co. can produce such a record.

The new window awnings on Sink's Hotel add much to the appearance of the block.

Baker & Hall have just received two beautiful new show cases for their drug store.

Jim Cole started his ice wagon yesterday morning for the summer campaign.

This rainy weather bothers some about plowing for corn, but it is needed, after all.

Col. Geo. P. Sanford, formerly editor of the Lansing Journal, will emigrate to Dakota.

Mrs. Spaulding's green house is crowded daily with people purchasing house plants.

Capt. C. R. Miller, of Adrian, was in town last Monday on business and favored us with a call.

Mrs. Geo. Everitt and "Little Joe" left town on Friday last for a few week's visit at Lafayette, Ind.

Memorial services will be generally held throughout the churches on the Sunday previous to Decoration Day.

Good judges estimate that the wheat crop this season will be from one-quarter to one-third less than last year.

Thos. H. Mosher, of Springville, has been in business continuously longer than any other merchant in Lenawee county.

Nearly everybody in Tecumseh, men, women and children, took a walk down to the new railroad bridge last Sunday.

Rev. Geo. W. Hudson will deliver a temperance lecture at the Reform Club hall Sunday P. M. at 3 o'clock.—All are invited.

Dr. R. B. House will attend the meeting of the State Homoeopathic Medical Association to be held at Lansing next week.

Subject at Baptist church Sunday evening, "The Life of Eve,"—the second in the course of lectures on Sacred Biography.

The spring fair of the Central Michigan Agricultural Society will be held at Lansing on the 29, 30 and 31st of May and June 1st.

Chel Bronson, of Clinton, rejoices over an addition to his family. It weighs ten pounds and will vote when it gets old enough.

The "run" among the wall paper dealers of this village during the past three weeks has been a bonanza to buyers of that article.

The jug breaking concert at the Presbyterian church last Thursday evening was largely attended and netted the society about $200.

Miss Mertie Packer, of Morenci, is called an extra good schoolma'm. She ought to be for she has seven elder sisters who set her the example.

De Witt Tallman, who moved over to Adrian last month, was in town yesterday on business. It seems like old times to see his smiling countenance occasionally.

The ladies of the Episcopal church will hold an ice cream festival at the residence of Mrs. M. E. Corey next Wednesday evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

M. C. Miller, of New York city was the guest of Henry Smith, his uncle, a few days last week. He was called here to attend the funeral of his grandmother, Mrs. Eva Smith.

Willis Merritt started last week for Galveston, Texas, for a health trip, and his friends expect that the journey will restore him to his former health. Dr. Catlin accompanied him.

Kies Bros. have a change of ad. this week. Call at their establishment and guess on the beans. The stock is now complete, and they are offering rare inducements to buyers of clothing.

At Cotton's sale Friday and Saturday, the gentlemen have a chance of buying shirts at very low prices. See his advertisement.

Ira C. Billman, formerly pastor of the Congregational church at Adrian, has been admitted to the bar and began the practice of law at Sullivan, Indiana.

Adrian Record: In Tecumseh they have "jug breaking" concerts, right in the Presbyterian church. As fast as the jugs are emptied they are thrown out on the pavement and broken. We may be wrong in our conclusions, but this is the way we understand it.

The Biograper Illustrated is the title of a new monthly to be published at 23 Park Row, N. Y. The design of the publication is to furnish a trustworthy work of reference giving short biographical sketches of the "men of the day." Each sketch will be accompanied with a portrait. This monthly will supply a long felt need and it ought to obtain an extensive circulation from the first number.

Time brings greater men upon the stage of action than those who have gone before. It was once thought "Blind Tom" would never have his equal as a musical wonder, but now uprises "Boone," who is also a colored boy, and who has never seen the light of day, who is a greater musician, a greater prodigy, and more of a wonder than Tom. Boone is but 19 years old yet he plays several thousand pieces, and a great many composed by himself. "Blind Boone" will give an entertainment at the opera house on Friday evening, May 18.

Dr. E. Test, who is widely known in this vicinity, having been a popular and successful principal of Raisin Valley Seminary for five years, is associated with Prof. Cyrus W. Hodgin, for many years a leading professor in the Indiana State Normal school at Terre Haute, in starting a Normal school in Richmond, Indiana, to aid which the citizens have contributed $5,000. With these men at the head the enterprise will certainly be a success, and Richmond is to be congratulated.

The election of W. B. Keyser as Secretary, and Minor Davidson as Treasurer of the Fair Association are two excellent selections. Mr. Keyser is one of the rising young farmers of northern Lenawee, is in good circumstances and hence will have sufficient leisure time to devote to the work.—Mr. Davidson is well known as one of our "solid" farmers and the finances of the Association will be safe in his hands. The Association expect to get to work at an early day.

THE TECUMSEH SCHOOLS.

The following complimentary notice of our public schools is clipped from the May number of the Educational News. It is but simple justice to Prof. Hammond to state that our schools have been in a very flourishing condition during the past year under his superintendency.

The schools of Tecumseh continue in a flourishing condition. The enrolment the present term is quite as large as during the two preceding terms. This is something unusual, as the attendance is commonly much smaller during the spring term than during the fall and winter terms. The total enrolment for the year will reach about six hundred. The schools occupy four buildings and employ twelve teachers—one additional teacher having been added to the corps since the beginning of the year. There is an excellent library of 630 volumes, from which pupils are permitted to draw one book per week. The high school is furnished with cyclopædias, histories and books of reference, which are always at the pupils' service. It is also well supplied with philosophical and chemical apparatus. The vacancy in the sixth grade caused by the resignation of Miss Etta Wilson, is filled by Miss Nellie Clark, of Ridgeway. The graduating class this year will be quite small—there being but three members of the class, all young ladies. The present term continues eight weeks longer.

COUNTY CONDENSATIONS.

Addison has a new livery stable.

Deerfield will celebrate Decoration Day.

There are some cases of scarlet fever in Franklin.

Morenci is talking about a 4th of July celebration.

The good people of Blissfield go fishing on Sunday.

Clinton proposes to have a base ball club this season.

There were 60 cases of the measles at Fairfield during April.

The Chaffee-Hudson's base ball club have reorganized for 1883.

Morenci has a suburb called Sugartown. It must be a sweet place.

The Educational News for May is at hand. It is an extra good number.

A. M. Sickley, of Woodstock, is the agent for Fairbank's standard scales.

The W. C. T. U. of Morenci has been revived and will go to work again.

Barnum and Jumbo are coming.—They will be at Adrian on Wednesday June 20th.

The Odd Fellows of Jasper celebrated the anniversary of the order with a grand ball.

The state fish commissioners have planted fifty million young white fish in the river Raisin near Monroe.

The Detroit and Indianapolis base ball clubs will play a match game at Adrian on Wednesday, May 23d.

A portion of the burnt district of Deerfield will be covered with good brick blocks before the season closes.

Nine hundred and forty-seven pounds of butter were taken from the Hudson creamery one day last week.

The Adrian Record is favored with serenades from the salvation army.—How happy the Record man must be.

Quoth Willard to Rynd,
"You're nothing but wind."
Quoth the Doctor to Stearns,
"You're troubled with worms."

The Sunday School apartments of the M. E. church at Adrian have been remodelled, and were dedicated last Sunday.

Clinton is to have a clothing store again. John Ed McCollum will soon open a stock of goods at the old Silvers' stand.

Monday evening of last week Bishop Harris administered the rite of confirmation to a class of 38 persons at St. John's church in Clinton.

One of the Blissfield hotels has been closed. The proprietor cannot give the required liquor bonds, and he claims that he cannot keep hotel without a bar.

The Salvation Army of Adrian have taken up new quarters on the Fair grounds. Plenty of fresh air will do them good. Now let them take an occasional dose of clean water and soft soap.

Blissfield Advance: The subject of cleaning out the river Raisin from its head to mouth, is being again revived. It is said there is a new process of having the work accomplished. The benefit, in a sanitary point of view, would be incalculable.

The next meeting of the Lenawee county Teacher's Association will be held in the high school room in Adrian on Saturday, May 12. Prof. Wendell, of Hudson, Prof. Smith, of Clinton, and others, are expected to present papers. Miss Stella Mason has the music in charge, and this will no doubt be an interesting feature.

Adrian Record: The Press explains all about the bloodless war in the editorial room between the editor and Dr. Rynd. So glad it wasn't a real deadly fight. Corpses are likely to smell in warm weather. Any time either gent wants to match himself against our 107 pounds, we can be found, ready to emulate the poor widder and cast in all our might.

Adrian Record: The explosion of a fire-cracker during the salvation services at Floral hall, Thursday evening sounded like the 'crack of doom' to many who were 'out of the ark' and consternation prevailed. The best use the Salvation drummer could make of his club, would be to beat a dead-march on the "gourd" of the miserable rowdy who threw the fire-cracker.

The Clinton News says:

By order of Judge Harriman, Crowell Eddy, of Lenawee county, has paid into the county treasury $6,550.66 which belongs to the unknown heirs of Thomas Harvey, who died in Manchester in 1879.—Register.

Mr. Eddy was in our office a few days ago and informed us that these figures were incorrect. He says he paid $4,556.66, instead of $6,550.66, as above stated.

The Hudson Gazette says: "Dar." Allen of the Morenci Observer, having severed his connection with the M. E. church, there is almost as much comment as when the great Brooklyn divine left the Cong'l association. It is understood that Bro. Allen is either a little out of accord with the faith of his early years, or that, as the Post and Tribune has it: "As the season for publishing fish stories, snake stories, and egg stories, is at hand, he has sawed the 'Rev.' off his name."—This last imputation we resent.

RAILROAD NOTES.

The grading on this end of the line is progressing rapidly. The road bed is about completed from Ridgeway to the big bridge across the Raisin. The grading on Cummins street and its extension is pushed entirely through the corporation limits. About half the grade is done on Judge Stacy's farm, and west of Howard's farm to the Franklin town line the bed is ready for the ties. In the towns of Franklin and Cambridge the road bed is nearly all done. By the first of June the road bed will be ready for the ties from Addison to Britton. East of Britton the work is not so far advanced, as the exact location of the line from that point has been uncertain. In fact we are not aware that the line east of Britton has been positively decided upon as yet.

The Pulaski contractor has been bringing teams from Indiana.

The west line, so-called, has been adopted through the village of Homer by the M. & O. railroad.

The old grade from Marshall north, about 100 miles of which is completed, is being taken in hand by the Ohio Central parties who are building the Toledo & Milwaukee and will have it organized before long, preparatory to its completion. The project is being handled quietly, but will probably be included in the new constructions of the current year.

Jackson Patriot: A car load of German emigrants from New York city passed through town Monday en route for Hanover, where they will work on the new M. & O. Ry. They were a muscular looking crowd and will do excellent work with the pick and shovel. Others of the same nationality are expected in a few days and will be given work by the same contractor.

Hanover Times: The work here will soon be finished. There are a few cuts to be made, the deepest less than ten feet. It is thought that the railroad movement will arouse to activity the comparatively dead town, making business brisk, and adding to the value of real estate.

Marshall Statesman: Messrs. J. A. Latcha, J. E. Neale and S. Lamb, of the M. & O., were in the city this week, sounding the people on the depot question. No conclusion was arrived at and a second visit will be necessary. Representatives of the different factions gained the ears of the officials at various times, but when asked to express their own opinions, were decidedly non-committal. Mr. Latcha stated that the engine of the construction train will probably reach Marshall the middle of next month.

A correspondent of the Battle Creek Journal writes as follows: "On reaching the grade of the new railroad about one-half mile north of Augusta, your correspondent proceeded in a northwesterly direction to the eastern terminus of the track, on which were standing seven new flat cars marked 'Michigan & Ohio Ry.,' which contained about 2,000 cedar ties. Here he had the pleasure of meeting the assistant superintendent, who had just arrived from Allegan. The road is being laid with steel rails weighing 250 pounds to the rail, and there have already been laid 22 miles of new track from Monteith east, which is being ballasted at the present time and put in good shape. The iron on the old road from Allegan to Monteith is being replaced with steel. The bridge over the Kalamazoo this side of Augusta is 435 feet long, and will be completed in a few days.

Detroit Evening News: A Niles farmer was told by a stranger that he, the stranger, had dreamed that money was buried on the farmer's land. They went together and dug up 3,000 shining dollars. The stranger couldn't carry away his 1,500; therefore the farmer gave the stranger $500 in greenbacks and his note for $1,000, and lugged the entire 3,000 pieces home. After three weeks of hard-to-be-contained enjoyment and fearful anxieties because of so much money in the house, the farmer thought to astonish the bank officials by making a big deposit. But on interviewing them, the astonishment was of an agricultural species—the 3,000 shining dollars were counterfeit. But the $1,000 note must be paid all the same.

DIED.

SMITH—In this village at the residence of her son Henry Smith, on Wednesday, May 2d, 1883, Mrs. Eva Smith, at the ripe old age of 87 years, 1 month and 17 days.

The deceased was born in Ronelstorf, Bavaria, Germany, in the year 1796. In 1837 she lost her husband, and in 1847 she emigrated to this country, a widow with a family of children. Five sons survive her, all of whom have grown to man's estate, and who are prominent and respected citizens in the communities where they live. Michael Smith of Lake Ridge, Henry Smith of Tecumseh, Geo. Smith of Toledo, Ohio, John W. Smith, of Youngstown, Ohio, and Adam Smith, of Sterling, Ill. The deceased had been a member of the evangelical Lutheran church since her childhood, was a kind mother and an exemplary christian. She was buried in the Lake Ridge cemetery on Friday last, the services being held at the church there, and conducted by the Rev. M. Doerfler. All her sons and a large concourse of friends were present at the funeral. A "mother in Israel" has gone to her final reward.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Necessitating a Surgical Operation—Loving Mother Attempts to Take a Pair of Shears from Her Child.

PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner, of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A sight ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could, but intensely painful inflammation ensued, [illegible] other eye. Total blindness in a woman having the care of a household is an irreparable misfortune. Despairing, Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, saving little all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. Not owing to pain and the great distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this were the doctor prescribed Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, with a surprising results. Her recovery was rapid, her system soon regained its lost equilibrium, and laid a sure foundation of health.

Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by our druggists at one dollar a bottle.

Immediate Relief Warranted.
Permanent Cure Guaranteed.

For years established and now known to fail in a single case in the worst form of Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia, prescribed by all physicians and pronounced by them a specific.

SECRET.

THE ONLY RESOLVER OF THE POISONOUS ACID THAT SETTLES IN THE BLOOD OF RHEUMATIC AND GOUTY PATIENTS.

SALICYLICA is known as a common-sense remedy, being the first to make direct war with the cause of Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia, while so many so-called specifics and alleged panaceas only treat some of the effects.

It has been recognized by eminent scientists that such any applications, such as rubbing with oils, liniments, blisters and soothing lotions, will not relieve these diseases, which are the result of an impure condition of the blood, and nothing but SALICYLICA will reach the root of the trouble.

SALICYLICA works with equal certainty on the old and stubborn chronic cases of Rheumatism, [illegible] and Neuralgia, [illegible] in the worst forms, [illegible] in three days.

Gems of Thought.

The evil cannot brook delay.
The good can well afford to wait.
Justice delayed is justice denied.
What frenzy dictates jealousy believes.
Indulge no doubts—they are traitors.
Beauty is the mark God sets upon virtue.
A virtuous man is ever in unison with nature's works.
In every parting there is an image of death.
Opportunity sooner or later, comes to all who work and wait.
Intemperance is the bane of happiness and the root of all evil.
Half the ills we hoard in our hearts are ills because we hoard them.
We lose the peace of years when we hunt after the rapture of moments.
The qualities we possess never make us so ridiculous as those we pretend to have.
A man's good breeding is the best security against the people's ill manners.
Nothing will so increase and strengthen the virtues as practice and experience in them.
When you give to others give cheerfully. There is no blessing from an unwilling offering.
The firmest friendships have been formed in mutual adversity; as iron is most strongly united by the fiercest flame.
Good temper, like a summer day, sheds a brightness over everything. It is the sweetener of toil and the soother of disquitude.
Reflect upon your present blessings, of which every man has many—not upon your past misfortunes, of which all men have some.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS

They are composed of Roots, Herbs and Gums of the most healing and beneficial kind.

As a family Medicine they are unrivalled, curing Headache, Constipation, Liver Complaint, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia—cleansing the blood of all impurities—acting on the Liver, Kidneys and other important organs, restoring the waste tissue, and adding years to the lives of all who use them.

For fifty years they have been used by the American public, and their constantly increasing sales show how they are appreciated.

A Perfect Remedy in 50 Diseases.

Ashfield, Mass.

I am verging on eighty years, and deem it my duty to suffering humanity to say that my long life is due to Brandreth's Pills which have been my sole medicine for half a century. I know the last forty-three years of my life is owing solely to their use. Your Pills saved me many times after the best medical skill in several States had given me up as hopeless. I have had many converts to purgation with Brandreth's Pills, and have seen them perform almost miracles of cure. For children, a few doses have cured measles, scarlet fever, and whooping cough.

In all female troubles and weaknesses I have never known them to fail. In adult males I have known them to cure worst cases of dyspepsia, rheumatism, kidney diseases, dysentery and diarrhœa, even dropsy, paralysis, and apoplexy have yielded to a persistent course of Brandreth's Pills. In fact I have found them the Life Elixir. They act as a continual preventives against the effects of time, disease, and labor.

SOUTH BUTLER, N. Y., March 20, 1882.—Rheumatic Syrup Co.: Gentlemen—This is to certify that I have used your Syrup for rheumatism. I have been troubled with that terrible disease for twenty years; some of the time could not get out of doors. My limbs began to get out of shape. I have doctored with different physicians, but could get no relief. One of my limbs began to wither, and I made up my mind I would be a cripple for life, and for several weeks I could not turn over in bed without help. I was finally persuaded to try Rheumatic Syrup, and had taken it but a short time when it began to help me, and in less than two months I was out of doors, and am now so I can walk as well as ever. In short, I am well.

Dr. Rush's Medical Association:
Dear Doctors—The three bottles of Dr. Rush's Regulator I ordered were received by express last week. I have taken nearly one bottle, and am highly satisfied with the result. For over two years I have been troubled with sharp pain at my heart. My physician, upon examination, pronounced it enlargement of the heart, and was unable to give me any relief. The trouble grew worse, and I became convinced that I could not be cured. While in New York City, last week, I called on one of the most prominent physicians there, who charged me $25 for an examination and then recommended your "Regulator." Knowing you to be a regular Medical Association, and not a patent medicine scheme, I ordered the three bottles. I have not been troubled since I commenced taking it, but shall continue and take the entire three bottles so as to obtain a permanent cure. You have my sincere thanks. I am, gentlemen,

Need of Higher Culture in Home Life.

Nothing is more painful to one who knows what mothers may do for their children, or wives for their husbands, than to see the idleness of young women who are not compelled to work for a living, and to find how empty-headed they are. This may seem a small matter in itself, but the moment a woman is married she has to learn how to be interesting in her home to her husband, and as soon as she is a mother, the training of her children is the foremost duty of the hour. In these two spheres of life, which are essentially the goal of woman's existence, everything depends upon what the wife and mother brings to her several positions, everything for her own, her husband's and her children's happiness. Women are perpetually losing their husbands because they rely upon evanescent personal charms to uphold affection, but the surest way to provide against the decay of the enthusiasm of the early married life is to cultivate those mental and moral qualities which make women always charming and attractive.

Nothing is any surer to do this, aside from personal manners, than the improvement of one's mind, the growth of literary tastes, the interest of what imports new and wholesome attractions into one's home. It may be the microscope, or French or German translation, or botany or English literature, or history, or music, but whatever it is, the stimulus of knowing one thing thoroughly is worth immensely more than the knowledge itself, because it gives one the power to know more and to enjoy more. These studies, even in themselves, are refining, but pursued in the genial atmosphere of home, they are more than simply refining; they are agencies by which the spirit of the home is chastened, made moral, even made religious. Religion in one's home is the best when it is the least insisted upon, when its life is the unconscious poetry of the household, when it seems to be the natural culmination of the amenities of life; and religion and culture go together in the well-ordered life of every woman. But it is when the wife becomes a mother, when the religion and culture find a congenial sphere for development within the sanctities of home, when among children and among friends and neighbors the tone is always uplifting and inspiring, that literary culture and the genial development of a woman's mind and heart seem to make life sweetest and best. Fortunate is the boy or girl who has such a home. It is from such quarters, be they the log cabin or the house with brown stone front, that men and women go forth with the idea that conquers the world. Every leading person has had a start somewhere, and usually it is traced to one of these mothers whose native or acquired culture has been imparted to her bright children. Here is the true importance of literature at home. It pays for itself hundreds of times over in its influence upon parents, and in the early direction it gives to their children.

The Passion for Diamonds.

"Are there more diamonds worn now than ever before in this country?"

"I should say so, most decidely. I have been in the business over thirty years, and I never knew such a rage for the stone as exists to-day. Recently I attended a garden party at the Grand Union hotel at Saratoga and I saw bushels of them. This is the only way to describe the number of valuable diamonds worn there, and most of them were fine stones. Nearly every woman there had big solitaires in rings or ear-rings. You see the finest diamonds are worn solitaire in studs, rings and earrings, while for bracelets and hair-pins an inferior stone may be used, as they are not so conspicuous. I noticed one thing, however, at the Grand Union—nine-tenths of the diamonds were not clean. Dust settles on everything, and it is astonishing how little care a woman will give to her diamonds. They carefully inspect their gloves and shoes before completing their toilets, but their diamonds, worth often thousands of dollars, receive no attention, become dirty, and are sometimes lost. A lady customer of mine lost a very valuable diamond after possessing it years. If she had been in the habit of giving the gem any attention, she would have noticed that a setting of eighteen carat gold will wear out in time and lose its grip on the stone. The large solitaire diamond is now preferred to the cluster. Few diamonds are worn by gentlemen except in the case of young men anxious for display. Here and there a gentleman will wear solitaires on his shirt bosom, but if he has good taste he will be careful that they are small or he may be taken for a gambler. It is astonishing how much money is sometimes represented in the diamonds worn by ladies on a "swell" occasion. It is a common thing in New York society to see $10,000 or $20,000 in diamonds on a lady's person. Mrs. John Jacob Astor has been known to wear $50,000 worth of diamonds at an evening reception, and I should say that the diamonds worn by Mrs. W. H. Vanderbilt at the garden party I spoke of were very fully that amount of money. Mrs. Mackay, wife of the "bonanza king," once offered to buy the famous "Regent" diamond, the most valuable in the world. It is valued at a mere million, but the French government wouldn't sell it."—New York Tribune.

The result of comparatively low rates of interest and the fostering care which the British Government has always shown towards her shipping is demonstrated in the enormous expansion of her merchant marine, which now reaches the proportions of 16,000,000 tons, valued at $500,000,000, with gross annual earnings of $225,000,000. The combined tonnage of all other nations does not exceed 11,000,000 tons. It is a noteworthy fact that while British sailing tonnage has materially decreased during the last ten years, there has during the same period been a remarkable increase of British steam tonnage. Thus ten years ago Great Britain had but 1,500,000 tons of steam shipping; she now (1881) has about three fifths of the entire steam shipping of the world.

She is Going to Try It.

A correspondent writes from way down East, in Lubec, Me., to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N.Y.: "I called on you about six weeks ago, sick with Bilious Disease. I bought a bottle of 'Favorite Remedy,' and it cured me. What I want is some more of your medicine. My daughter is going to try it." Sensible men. He will not regret it, and when his daughter has tried it she will be satisfied too. "Favorite Remedy" is just the thing for the ills that afflict womankind.

The Bad and Worthless

are never imitated or counterfeited. This is especially true of a family medicine, and it is positive proof that the remedy imitated is of the highest value. As soon as it had been tested and proved by the whole world that Hop Bitters was the purest, best and most valuable family medicine on earth, many imitations sprung up and began to steal the notices in which the press and people of the country had expressed the merits of H. B., and in every way trying to induce suffering invalids to use their stuff instead, expecting to make money off the credit and good name of H. B. Many others started nostrums put up in similar style to H. B., with variously devised names in which the word "Hop" or "Hops" were used in a way to induce people to believe they were the same as Hop Bitters. All such pretended remedies or cures, no matter what their style or name is, and especially those with the word "Hop" or "Hops" in their name or in any way connected with them or their name, are imitations or counterfeits. Beware of them. Touch none of them. Use nothing but genuine Hop Bitters, with a bunch or cluster of green Hops on the white label. Trust nothing else. Druggists and dealers are warned against dealing in imitations or counterfeits.

MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Sciatica, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Eruptions, Nervous Irritation and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

Wholesome Food.

The earliest agitator in the matter, a writer in the Nineteenth Century, observes when traveling in Sicily, that the laboring classes there live healthily and work well upon a vegetable diet, the staple article of which bread is made of well ground wheat meal. Nor are the Sicilians by any means the only people so supported. The Hindoos of the Northwestern Provinces can walk fifty or sixty miles a day with no other food than "chapatties" made of the whole meal, with a little "ghee," or Golam butter. Turkish and Arab porters capable of carrying burdens of from 400 to 600 pounds, live on bread only, with the occasional addition of fruit and vegetables. The Spartans and Romans of the olden time lived their vigorous lives on bread made of wheaten meal. In Northern as well as Southern climates, we find the same thing. In Russia, Sweden, Scotland, and elsewhere, the poor live chiefly on bread always made from some whole meal—wheat, oats, or rye—and the peasantry, of whatever climate, so fed, always compare favorably with our South English poor, who, in conditions of indigence precluding them from obtaining sufficient meat food, starve, if not to death, at least into sickliness, on the white bread it is our modern English habit to prefer. White bread alone will not support animal life. Bread made of whole grain will. The experiment has been tried in France by Magendie. Dogs were the subjects of the trial, and every care was taken to equalize all the conditions—to proportion the quantity of food given in each case to the weight of the animal experimented upon, and so forth. The result was sufficiently marked. At the end of forty days the dogs fed soley on white bread died. The dogs fed on bread made of the whole grain remained vigorous, healthy and well nourished. Whether an originally healthy human being, if fed solely on white bread for forty days, would likewise die at the end of that time, remains, of course a question. The tenacity of life exhibited by Magendie's dogs will not evidently bear comparison with that of the scarcely yet forgotten forty days wonder—Dr. Tanner. Nor is it by any means asserted that any given man or any given child would certainly remain in vigorous health for an indefinite length of time if fed solely on wheat-meal bread. Not a single piece of strong evidence has been produced, however, to show that he would not; and in the only case in which whole-meal bread has been tried with any persistency or on any considerable scale among us—to wit, in jails—facts go to show such bread to be an excellent and wholesome substitute for more costly forms of nutritious food.

Changes in Men's Clothing.

It is curious to note how great are the changes in men's costume. Looking only at one detail, the waistcoat, which, last century, was the cause of endless extravagance, we find that it is now of the utmost simplicity, and is for the most part, hidden by the coat. But the waistcoat had its day. There was a time when dandies made it a matter of pride to have dozens—nay, scores—of waistcoats. In Germany, during the last century, the luxury was considerable, and the love of display incalculable. One of the Ministers under Frederick the Great used to boast that he had 300 waistcoats and 300 wigs. "So many wigs and so little head," said Frederick the Great, speaking of him. Men of position were required to have a positive museum of waistcoats in cloth of gold. The waistcoat was a work of art, a painter's canvas filled with subjects. It was covered with admirable representations of hunting episodes, of court scenes, of famous fables, of village festivals. The waistcoat of the gallant of the period was enlivened with the pictorial history of the loves of Mars and Venus the Marshall' waistcoat was embroidered with military scenes, while one of the court dandies acquired fame (which he would not have otherwise enjoyed) by reason of the illustrations of popular plays to be seen on his manly breast. The rage for these illuminated waistcoats lasted till the end of Louis XVI.'s reign. The buttons to which these garments were fastened were not less worthy of notice. They were for the most part, of about the size of our silver dollars, and were in steel, in silver, in precious stones, sometimes even in diamonds. The Count-d'Artois, afterwards Charles X., was celebrated for the magnificence of his buttons, some of which were in enamel, and embellished with miniatures of the celebrated beauties, of classic heads of the gods and goddesses. Some men of the lower type wore on their buttons the portraits and initials of the queens of their hearts. The revolution brought about some changes. The waistcoat was shortened, and its buttons bore the portrait of Robespierre, who was known among the dandies as the man with the best powdered hair in France! or of Saint Just, or Fouquier-Tinville, or others. But this fashion soon disappeared, and the waistcoat has gradually lost its importance as an article of masculine apparel, and is now considered useful as a depot for the watch, but as an ornament is nothing.

Entertaining Company.

The whole philosophy of hospitality is summed up by Emerson in the following: "I pray you, O excellent wife, not to cumber yourself and me to get a rich dinner for this man or this woman who has alighted at our gate, nor a bed-chamber made ready at too great a cost. These things, if they are curious in, they can get for a dollar at the village. But let this stranger see, if he will, in your looks, in your accent and behavior, your heart and earnestness, your thought and will, what he cannot buy at any price, at any village or city, and which he may well travel fifty miles and dine sparingly and sleep hard, in order to behold. Certainly, let the board be spread and the bed be dressed for the traveler, but let not the emphasis of hospitality be in these things. Honor to the house where they are simple to the verge of hardship so that the intellect is awake and sees the laws of the universe, the soul worships truth and love, and honor and courtesy flow into all deeds." One of the greatest comforts of having a home should be that in it we have a place for friends and even strangers—rooms, more than supply the needs of the family, and extra "leaves" to the extension table. The secret of true hospitality, as Emerson has stated, is in its coming from the heart.

EARACHE.—This painful and troublesome disease in pathological terms means acute inflammation of the membrana tympani. The inflammation may be quickly subdued, the patient relieved from excruciating pain, and saved, perhaps, from subsequent confirmed deafness, by the following treatment which is similar to that so beneficial in analogous cases of disease of the eye, viz: leeches behind the ear, hydrarg. c. creta and belladonna powders, with warm fomentation.

Consumption

A REMEDY SUGGESTED BY A MINNESOTA PHYSICIAN.

In a letter from Minneapolis, Minn., to the Chicago Tribune, in which he declares that no cough mixture can reach the lungs, Dr. D Unger says:

I need not describe the symptoms of consumption, as they are so well known and frequently beheld that even the most unintelligent can diagnose the disease from the hectic spots in the cheeks, the terrible exhausting cough, the purulent expectoration, and wasting body; nor will I here pre[illegible] the thousand and one opinions already printed as to its causation. It will [illegible] seated, strenuous efforts to check its progress must be made. Nature herself always tries to do this, and with slight aid, she usually succeeds. Be hopeful, then, ye afflicted ones.

Let us compare life to a burning lamp. If we supply oil as rapidly as the flame consumes it, the wick remains unburnt, and the lamp throws out its given light; but if we fail to supply the oil needed to produce the flame, it is a foregone conclusion; the wick becomes consumed, the light grows dim, flickers, and finally goes out altogether. In other words, the light dies because there is too much oxygen and not enough carbon. So it is with a consumptive's life. The disease he suffers from is a wasting one, an internal fever which consumes the carbon in his blood more rapidly than the food he eats can supply it. If carbon was furnished as fast as the disease exhausted it, the body would not waste; if it was put into the blood in excess of what the disease required, there would be an increase in the strength and bulk of the body, instead of a decrease. Like the lamp, the supply of oil in the body must be equivalent to the demand or in excess of it. If this be not so, the life, like the wick, will be consumed.

Some months ago the little daughter (aged fourteen), of a trunk-maker in this city, one Mr. Garden—I am permitted to use his name—was pronounced a hopeless consumptive; and to have seen her at that time one would have supposed there was good ground for the decision, as she was a mere skeleton, had a terrible cough, expectorated over half a pint a day of greenish, blood-streaked tuberculous matter, and was so exceedingly nervous that she could scarcely sleep at all, night or day. She had been doctored a long time with cough and consumption specifics, and one or two physicians had tried their skill on her, but without avail, her life gradually drawing to its close. Meeting her father—who was almost heart-broken at the thought of soon losing her—one day, I gave him this prescription:

One half pound finely cut up beef steak (fresh.)
One drachm pulverized charcoal.
Four ounces pulverized sugar.
Four ounces rye whisky.
One pint boiling water.

Mix all together, let it stand in a cool place over night, and give from one to two teaspoonfuls liquid and meat—before each meal.

This was tried, and in four or five weeks this little girl was so rosy and healthy, free from all cough and other symptoms of disease, that it was considered almost a miracle in the neighborhood in which she lived.

What caused this great change? Simply the supplying of her system with more carbon than the disease could exhaust, thereby giving nature the upper hand in the conflict.

I have used this preparation very frequently, and have never found it to act otherwise than beneficially. The dose should be small at first, until the stomach becomes used to it, and then gradually increased.

Let all consumptives try it who read this, weighing themselves before they commence, and again after they have taken it for a week or ten days. To their astonishment they will discover that, instead of their wasting away, they will gain in strength and flesh.

Bill Nye Talks to Young Men in Regard to a Career.

Young man, what are you living for? Have you an object dear to you as life, and without the attainment of which you feel that your life will have been a wide, shoreless waste, peopled by the specters of dead ambitions? You can take your choice in the great battle of life, whether you will bristle up and win a deathless name, and owe everybody, or be satisfied with scabs and mediocrity. Many of those who now stand at the head of the nation as statesmen and logicians were once unknown, unhonored and unsung. Now they saw the air in the halls of Congress, and their names are plastered on the temple of fame.

You can win some laurels, too, if you will brace up and secure them when they are ripe. Daniel Webster, and President Garfield and Dr. Tanner and George Elliott were all, at one time, poor boys. They struggled against poverty and public opinion bravely on till they won a name in the annals of history, and secured to their loved ones palatial homes, with lightning rods and mortgages on them. So may you, if you make the effort.

All these things are within your reach. Live temperately on $9 a month. That's the way we got our start. Burn the midnight oil if necessary. Get some true, noble-minded young lady of your acquaintance to assist you. Tell her of your troubles and she will tell you what to do. She will gladly advise you. Then you can marry her, and she will advise you some more. After that she will lay aside her work any time to advise you. You needn't be out of advice at all unless your want to. She, too, will tell you when you have made a mistake. She will come to you frankly and acknowledge that you have made a jackass of yourself.

As she gets more acquainted with you she will be more candid with you, and in her unstudied girlish way, she will point out errors, and gradually convince you with an old chair-leg and other arguments, that you were wrong, and your past life will come up before you like a panorama, and you will tell her so, and she will let you up again. Life is indeed a mighty struggle. It is business. We can't all be editors and lounge around all the time, and wear good clothes, and have our names in the papers, and draw a princely salary. Some one must do the work and drudgery of life, or it won't be done.

The quinine production of the world is estimated at from 250,000 to 260,000 lbs per year, as follows: Germany, 56,000 lbs; Italy, 45,000 lbs; France, 45,000 lbs; England, 27,000 lbs; America, 63,000 lbs; India, 19,000. Efforts are being made to acclimatise the cinchona in Italy. Its successful culture in India and Ceylon encourages the belief that it will grow wherever the soil is dry, the rainfall large, and the climate temperate.

Miscellaneous Recipes.

Harvest Soup.—Cut in small pieces one pound of good beef, cover with cold water, and boil gently for three hours; let it stand over night; remove all the fat; bring to a boil and add a can of lobster, cut fine; prepare one cauliflower sliced, cut the corn from one dozen ears, break in small pieces one quart of butter-beans, slice one onion, cut fine three or four radishes, add all to the soup, with one whole green bull-pepper, one teaspoonful black pepper, one teaspoonful salt; in one hour add one quart of tomatoes sliced; when tender, carefully remove without breaking on the skimmer the bull pepper; simmer the rest four hours longer; add no more water before [illegible] keep from burning; after they are in none will be needed. Half the above quantities can be used. Some like potato with the other vegetables. Add salt to taste before dishing. A little rice can be used, if liked, in the soup.

Chicken with Okra.—Singe and draw a large, tender chicken, cut in small pieces, put in a saucepan with two ounces of butter, two ounces of lean ham, and an onion cut in squares; stir on the fire until the moisture is evaporated, drain the butter off, wet with two quarts of beef broth, add a quart of peeled and seedless tomatoes (cut in small pieces,) half a green pepper, (cut small,) four ounces of rice, and about 50 tender okras, (pared at both ends and cut in rounds;) season with salt, pepper, nutmeg, a bunch of parsley with aromats, also a leek, and celery, pour it into a soup-tureen and serve.

Muffins.—One quart sifted flour, two eggs one tablespoonful melted butter, one tablespoonful sugar, one teaspoonful salt, (not heaped,) quarter yeast-cake dissolved in a little water; mix with sufficient sweet milk to make a medium stiff batter; beat the eggs very light, stir all together, set to rise over night, add one small teaspoonful soda just before baking; bake in gem-pans on top of stove to set the bottom, finish in quick oven; not to be turned over.

Quickly-Made Beef Tea.—Take any desired quantity of steak from the top part of the round, as this has less fat and more juice than any other part; remove all the fat and divide the meat into small pieces, cutting across the grain; put the meat in a dry saucepan and allow it to sweat for five minutes over a slow fire, stirring occasionally to prevent sticking. After sweating for five minutes, you will find the meat white in color, and surrounded by a rich, nourishing gravy, which, in case of great exhaustion, may be given in this form. But ordinarily we next pour over the meat its weight in cold water, allowing a pint of water to a pound of beef. Stir until the water boils; it must not boil again, but simmer gently for five or ten minutes until the sauce is drawn out, then strain carefully into a bowl, and if there is a particle of fat on the top, remove it with a piece of brown, unsized paper. By this method you may take off every star of fat without wasting any of the beef tea, as is done when using a ladle or spoon. Salt according to taste, but always lightly.

Horse-Radish Vinegar (English.)—Quarter of a pound of scraped horse-radish, one ounce minced chalot, one drachm cayenne, one quart vinegar; put all in a bottle, shake well every day for two weeks; when thoroughly steeped, strain and bottle, and it is ready for use. This is made best in September or October, as horse-radish is best then, and it is a nice relish for meat.

On Piling Wood.

Many people who handle wood do not know that if they wish the bark to come off they should pile it bark down; if they wish to retain the bark the opposite course should be taken. A correspondent writes to the Detroit Post and Tribune, giving his experience, as follows: "I have sold wood for over forty years in Michigan and I find that when wood is corded bark up the bark remains on until I sell and measure up the wood, and all that is piled bark down, the bark falls off and measures nothing; besides, there is more heat in the bark than in the sap of the log. The most and best ashes are also in the bark. I have on my place now some maple wood that was chopped nine years ago and corded bark up and the bark would hold on if I would draw the wood to Saginaw (18 miles) and cord up and measure; besides, the bark is lighter to draw. Where the bark is piled down the water runs in around the wood and makes it dozy, wet and heavy. Tell your neighbors to try it. Railroad companies would save thousands of dollars by piling their wood bark up.

What the Minister Says.

Homer, Ill.

Mr. A. Kiefer—My Dear Sir:—I have been afflicted for the last four years with derangement of the Liver, causing Dyspepsia, Headache, Nausea, and general derangement of the whole system. I have tried a great many preparations, but found no relief until I tried one bottle of your Taraxine, which has permanently cured me. I also found it to be good for the Ague. I commend it to all who suffer with derangement of the liver. Very truly yours. Rev. Thomas Whitlock.

GRAFTING WAX. The following is a recipe for making grafting wax that will not melt in summer nor crack in winter: Three parts resin, three parts beeswax and two parts tallow will make a good grafting wax. A cheaper wax that has given us satisfaction, is made by melting together four parts good, clear resin, two parts beeswax and one part tallow. When the ingredients all are melted and mixed, pour into a pail of cold water, when the wax will harden sufficiently to be worked and pulled, as in working molasses candy. If used in cold weather it will be necessary to keep it in warm water, and in hot weather cold water will be needed. For using grafting wax is sometimes cut into strips, spread on narrow strips of cloth, which are wound around the graft.

Trust it Every Time.

A patient, living the under shadows of the Highlands of the Hudson, writes to Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y.: "Your medicine recommends itself so thoroughly that you may hardly are for a statement from me, yet from my own experience of its excellence, and from what I know of its operation in other cases, I should like voluntarily to say that 'Kennedy's Favorite Remedy' deserves its high reputation. The public may trust it every time to do what you claim for it." Sold by all druggists. Dr. David Kennedy, Proprietor, Rondout, N. Y.

Our Daughters.

The foe of American social life is the tendency of luxury and effeminacy among the well-to-do young women of our American cities and large towns. They do not realize how this dreadful mania for expensive pleasures and a life of alternate idleness and amusement is destroying their health, abolishing true marriage, feeding the flames of gross sensuality and intemperance among young men, and saddening the hopes of the best parents of the land. Some of them will never know it in this world. But most of them have no real purpose to waste their lives in this wretched way. And it is a high crime in mothers, teachers, ministers of religion, and the public press to pander to this insanity. [illegible] girls are sacrificed every year, when a little wise and prudent guidance would save them. But we feel that they should be told that unless they change this life they will pass away like the flowers of June, and a more hardy and resolute class occupy their places.

The New Discovery.

Dr. Deming's Pile Ointment, the discovery of a physician of wide reputation, who has achieved the greatest success, the most conspicuous distinction, and the highest honors in his profession, is a sure cure for blind, bleeding, itching and ulcerated piles. Is Fun Better than Physic.

Fun is excellent; a hearty laugh is known the whole world over to be a health promoter; but fun does not fill the bill when a man needs physic, on the other hand people take too much physic. They would be more healthy, live longer and enjoy life thoroughly if they used Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic, which cures all blood disorders, indigestion, kidney and liver troubles, removes pimples, and is a perfect tonic. Can be taken by the most delicate. Only 50c a bottle, of Baker & Hall.

If you think it right to differ from the times, and to make a stand for any valuable point of morals, do it, however rustic, however antiquated, however pedantic it may appear; do it—not for insolence, but grandly and seriously—as a man who wore a soul of his own in his bosom, and did not wait until it was breathed into him by the breath of fashion.

Hatch's Universal Cough Syrup gives your kidneys and liver a jog to help relieve your lungs of a bad cough, or your child of croup. There can be no membraneous croup when Universal Cough Syrup is used in the first symtoms of the disease. No family with children can afford to be without it one day. 25 and 50 cents.

The past forty years have witnessed prodigious growth in American farming. In 1840 our grain product was six hundred and fifteen million bushels; ten years later it had risen to eight hundred and two millions; ten years later still to a billion and two hundred and thirty-eight millions, ten years later yet to a billion and three hundred and eighty-seven millions, and nine years later, or 1879, to two billions four hundred and thirty-one millions. These annual cereal products have risen from a value of four billion dollars in 1850 to one of eleven billion dollars in 1870, and probably to one of fifteen billions or more in 1880; and the surplus, after paying wages and expenses, was over two billion dollars in 1870, and perhaps three billions in 1880.

NOTICE. I am requested by the Common Council of the Village of Tecumseh to have printed the state law and the corporation law relative to sportsmen or others shooting on Sunday, inside the corporation, and if such offenses are committed to enforce the law for the suppression of the same. H. W. STEVENS, Marshall.

Following is the law of State and Corporation.

[No. 199.]

AN ACT to prevent hunting for game with fire-arms, dogs, or otherwise on any enclosed lands or premises of another in this state without the consent of the owner or lessee of such lands or premises.

SECTION 1. The People of the State of Michigan enact, That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to hunt for game with fire-arms, dogs, or otherwise on any inclosed lands or premises of another in any county of this State without the consent of the owner or lessee of such lands or premises.

SEC. 2. Any person or persons violating the provisions of the foregoing section of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine not less than five nor more than twenty dollars, in the discretion of the court, and costs of prosecution. And in case the fine imposed and the costs of prosecution shall not be paid, the defendant shall be confined in the county jail of the county not less than five nor more than thirty days: Provided, however, That no complaint shall be made or entertained against any person for the violation of any of the provisions of this act unless the same shall be made by the owner or lessee of the land or premises so trespassed against (upon).

Approved May 23, 1877.

CHAPTER VII.

SEC. 7. No person shall fire any gun, pistol, or cannon within the business portion of said village, nor fire any gun, pistol or cannon in or across any streets anywhere in said village, nor fire any gun, pistol or cannon in any portion of said village calculated, or having a tendency to endanger, injure or put persons in fear, without the consent of the council; under a penalty not to exceed twenty dollars, in the discretion of the court; but nothing in this section contained shall be construed to prohibit any military company existing under provisions of law, from firing any gun or cannon when authorized by their commanding officer.

ESTATE OF SYLVESTER ELLIS.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss.

THE VILLAGE OF MADISON

[illegible] to Madison Junction. The prospects is generally called, [illegible] the business of the village, and while there we took occasion to interview the business men of the place and learn something of their past achievements and future prospects. We were somewhat surprised to find so much of a village there. It is a prosperous little hamlet and their business seems to be having a healthy growth.

In the first place they have three churches two of which are well supported and sustain regular services. They also have a good school which is the pride of the neighborhood. In the matter of business establishments there are two blacksmith shops, one wagon shop, two general stores, one public hall, one brick and tile shop, one saw mill and the old nursery established by Israel Pennington.

Our first business took us to the nursery where we had an interview with Humboldt Pennington and purchased some sets of white grapevine plants. He now manages the old homestead farm and the nursery in connection therewith. He is selling a good many fruit and evergreen trees this spring. We partook of his hospitality during the dinner hour and found that we had struck the right place to dine.

The old blacksmith shop on the corners is run by John Frost, who has been in business there for so many years, and his son.

The shop west of the corners is run by Mr. E. Carter.

Mr. Wm. Richart, who is a brother of I. B. Richart, of this village, conducts the wagon shop and seems to be doing a good business.

W. P. Cotton, who has been located at the corners for fourteen years, keeps a full line of staple goods such as are generally kept for sale in a country store, consisting of dry goods, hats and caps, drugs and groceries, garden seeds, etc. He also buys butter and eggs. In the future as in the past he intends to keep in stock good goods and sell them at as cheap a figure as they can be bought anywhere. He is well satisfied with his past trade and considers the prospects good for the coming season. Being an old resident of the corners he has the advantage of a personal acquaintance with everyone which he finds to be a decided benefit to him in his business.

The other store is run by Spencer Morgan. Mr. Morgan is the postmaster, and the post office is in his building. He keeps a retail stock of dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, books and stationery and other similar goods. This firm has for some time been Sackley & Morgan, but Mr. Sackley has lately disposed of his interest to Mr. Morgan. Mr. S will devote his attention this season to the sales, having the agency of the state of Michigan of the Fairbanks scales. He expects to work mostly in northern counties. Mr. Morgan will continue the retail business of the store at the old stand, and his trade is now so well established that it will increase prosperously as heretofore.

The saw mill owned by Sage & Gary, which makes a convenient place for dances and such amusements, is not alive to [illegible] at present. Mr. Sage [illegible] the Board of Managers [illegible] Saturday [illegible] nothing [illegible] keep anything [illegible] instead [illegible] building [illegible] purposes with belts and [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] Mr. Sage [illegible] Friday of [illegible] which is a great convenience to the people [illegible] Hence has a good [illegible] [illegible] a steam heated during the season [illegible] having been in use about two months last fall. The saw mill has a capacity of about 10,000 feet per day, and has a good regular run of custom. Mr. Sage had a contract with the M. & O. road for 75,000 feet of timber [illegible] of which [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

ENGLAND'S UNREST.

London Has Been the Greatest Civilizing Force on the Earth,

But the End Cometh Surely.—The Handwriting is on the Wall.

E. V. Tousley in Minneapolis Tribune.

London will satisfy anybody's conception of a big city. No matter whence you came, there is a sense of vastness experienced which bewilders and oppresses. You meet an acquaintance on the thoroughfares always with surprise, and you part with no expectation of ever seeing him again. Take up this name of six letters and follow it through a year, in the greenland are strictly free millions of human beings, a net work of infinite activities and the profoundest social problems pushing towards solution. There are the great centers from which everything radiates—government, jurisprudence, industry, religion, literature, education and art. These are the busy looms out of which is woven that mysterious product which we denominate the social fabric—here London life.

Beyond is antiquity which stretches back and back, until it melts away in the twilight of fable. By all odds London has been the greatest civilizing force on the earth since the invention of printing, and to-day it is the very axle of the commercial world. Within twenty years it has increased in population 47 per cent, and if the Irish trouble doesn't prove deeper than agitation, it bids fair to keep on improving.

In conversation with intelligent Englishmen no one will fail to discover a certain unrest over the present political situation; an apprehension that something is working at the bottom, which sooner or latter will show a very angry appearance on the surface, if it does not upset altogether the existing order of things.

And why not? Starting with the fundamental truth that nothing is safe which is not just, let us see how the matter stands. After a few hundred years of robbery, nicknamed policy, it has come about that 12,000 people possess the land of England. But what of the 30,000,000 people who inhabit these islands? How has this transfer affected them? It's a long story of wrong and conflict, but the pith of it can be told in a few words. Subtracting the capitalists, the toiling millions are either wage-earners on the farm, or, driven into the cities, they are, under the increasing power of steam, mere wage-earners to the factory lords and shop keepers, the sole owners of the means of production. Through colonization and her ability to hold unchallenged the markets of the world, England has managed to keep down or turn aside the awful pressure, which has threatened her very life within the century just passed, and has held on to the old regime.

But the end cometh surely; the handwriting is on the wall in plain type. Not only he who runs may read, but he who reads may run. Queerly enough a rival has appeared who is disputing with her the empire of trade. The United States is producing one-fourth of the world's crop, one-fourth of its iron and one-fifth of its steel. Recent figures, summing up the year, furnish some striking contrasts, as follows:

	United States.	Great Britain.
Manufactures....	4,440,000,000	3,790,000,000
Mining.....	360,000,000	325,000,000
Agriculture.....	3,000,000,000	1,200,000,000
Carrying trade...	830,000,000	805,000,000

What is the lesson? Simply this: Our cheap meat and bread render English farming unprofitable; yea, ruinous at the present land rental; and though the landlords have scored heavy reductions in rent, the figure has not yet been reached which insures successful competition with American tillage. Our manufacturers are spreading with surprising rapidity, commending themselves alike by cheapness and quality. These are pregnant facts; food enough for the English gentleman (a term applied in England to the possessor of land) and for everybody who has a dollar in an English mill. Unless some conuteracting agency shows itself which cannot now be guessed, great distress will be experienced in Great Britain, and out of this, revolution, peaceable or otherwise; and this at no distant day. Some instrument will be raised up or pushed up as the mountains are by internal heat; and as the mountains lift the valleys, so will this instrument, crystallizing the thought of the hour, raise humanity to a higher level of justice.

Now I firmly believe this: Every honest man or woman, who desires to make an honest living, ought to have a place somewhere to make it; has a right to it—that is, in this sense the world owes him a living, and capital has no right to wrest from him the means of subsistence. The government that permits it is everlastingly in jeopardy. There are several corollaries which come from this that might be expounded. Let me leave them for another occasion. I remarked that America was a rival of England. This is putting the thing too mildly and too narrowly.

America is a spectre of awful portent to the ruling power of this whole continent. Truly the Mayflower took over with her the seed wheat of the centuries. Truly that little pilgrim ship was the speck no bigger than a man's hand, was the leaven which the woman hid, the stone which the builder rejected.

Journalistic Perpetual Motion.

Detroit Free Press.

"Oh, I don't think that perpetual motion is an impossibility at all," said a well-known London publisher the other day. "In fact I knew a case of it. Brentwood's Lady's Magazine was at one time a very good property in London. It sold for half a crown and it had a good clientage of advertisers who stuck to it year in and year out. At last it came into the hands of a rich grocer who used to puff his own business to such an extent that subscribers got disgusted and the magazine ran down to less than 200. Still the grocer-editor had a good old fogy advertising patronage, the class that held on and did not patronize anything new, so the journal would have been profitable had it not been for one thing which the grocer always had looked on as an unnecessary expense—namely, the payment of authors. So he hit on a happy scheme. He began with the January number and printed the number for the January twenty years before. He argued that very few that had seen the magazine then would remember it now and he resolved to pay for no more articles but reprint the magazine like the two acts of Rip Van Winkle with a twenty years interval between the old and the new number. Unfortunately the grocer died and shortly after the magazine did the same, otherwise we would have had a sort of journalistic perpetual motion."

Light From a Congressman.

Congressional Record.

Mr. Horr—"Do you go abroad for your authors as well as for your facts?"

Mr. Cox, of New York—"I go wherever there is sunlight; wherever I can find a tallow dip or ray, in Michigan or anywhere, I will go there or elsewhere. I go anywhere for my light. If I could get my friend from Michigan (Mr. Horr) in some sort of a condition where I could put a wick into him I would illuminate this great country from Maine to the gulf. [Great laughter and applause.]

Actors as Church-Goers.

New York Letter.

As a rule actors are not church-goers, and, considering how some preachers talk about them, their neglect of church-going can hardly be wondered at. I do not mean that all actors stay away from church, but a large number, if not the majority, certainly do. It is rarely that a man or woman of prominence on the stage is seen in a place of worship. Even the Little Church Around the Corner, which the profession regards with more favor than any other, for reasons very well known, has very few theatrical people in its congregation. The pastor, Rev. Dr. Houghton, has a friendly feeling toward actors in general, yet they do not go to his church except on some special occasion, such as a wedding or a funeral. From what I have observed, I should say that the Catholics in the profession attend church more regularly than any others, and next those who nominally belong to the Episcopal church. But the attendance all told is small, and though the number of people in the profession is continually increasing, the proportion of church goers does not increase. It does not follow, however, that people of the stage show any marked contrast to their neighbors in respect of morals and so on. Those who come in contact with them off the stage find them very much like other people in general character. They conduct themselves as decently, live as respectably, and show themselves entitled to as much regard every way as people of the same means in other callings. This may seem unnecessary to say, but having spoken of actors as not church goers it is proper to present the other side to prevent a wrong impression as to motive.

GAMBETTA'S MOTHER.

How She Made the Money to Give Him a Lawyer's Education.

An old acquaintance of Gambetta contributes a paper to The Century, containing the following account of a ruse by which Gambetta's mother got the means to send her son to the law school in Paris:

As the "Bazar Genois" was in the market-place its business lay in a great degree with rustics. Leon got sick of dealing with haggling rustics, and prayed to be removed from behind the counter to the desk. As he was a quick accountant, and wrote in a neat, legible, and flowing hand, this was granted. He did his best to give his mind to the business, but failed, and his health sank under the tedium of uncongenial pursuits. No device to which the watchful and tender mother resorted could get the better of his splenetic state. He had a fixed ambition which, as it appeared to him a chimerical one, made him restless, discontented and miserable; it was to study law, and become a teacher to a legal faculty in a provincial city. One day his mother called him to her. She said she had been unhappy in witnessing his growing depression, and she handed him a bag of money which she had saved unknown to anybody—enough to defray the cost of his journey to Paris and enable him to study law there for some time. A trunk full of clothing had been prepared, and was at the office of the stage-coach, where a place was booked for him to the nearest railway. Madame Gambetta instructed him to slip quietly away, in order to avoid a painful scene with his father, who was determined that his son should succeed him in the business. This communication was so unexpected and delightful that for the rest of the day Leon was was in a state of bewilderment. He rose betimes next morning, and stole off as instructed. Before Madame Gambetta had instructed her son to follow his vocation she had taken steps to keep him out of misery when the hoard placed in his hands should be exhausted. In 1856, the year in which Gambetta left Cahors, M. Emile Menier went there on a business tour. He had just opened the chocolate factory at Noisiel, and traded in medicated biscuits and sweet stuffs. Calling at the "Bazar Genois," he was received by Madame Gambetta. In answer to his proposal to sell his goods on commisssion, she, with tears in her eyes, met it with another. It was in the nature of the one enunciated by the unjust steward. "I have a son of great promise," she said, "whom I want to send to Paris, against his father's will, to study law. He is a good lad and no fool. But my husband, who wants him to continue his business here will, I know try to starve him into submission. What I am about to propose is that if I buy your chocolate at the rate you offer it, and buy it outright instead of taking it to sell on commission, you will say nothing if I enter it at a higher price, and you will pay the difference to my son?" M. Menier, from whose lips I had this anecdote, agreed, and for some years carried out the arrangement.

How Macklin, the Memorizer, was Stumped.

"Gaskell's Compendium" relates that Macklin used to lecture on "Aids to Memory," claiming that with his system he could repeat any paragraph of moderate length after once reading. Foote, the comedian, who was present at one of the lectures, wrote a nonsensical paragraph, which he challenged Macklin to repeat after one or more perusals. The paragraph ran as follows: "So she went into the garden to cut a cabbage leaf to make an apple pie, and at the same time a great she bear, coming up the street, popped its head into the shop, cried: 'What! no soap?' So he died, and she married the barber, and there were present the Picalilies, the Joblilies, the Gayrunes, and the Grand Panjandrum himself, with the little round button at top; and they all fell to playing a game of catch-as-catch-can till the gunpowder ran out at the heels of their boots." Macklin declined the challenge.

IN THE CATACOMBS.

[H. H. Ballard.]

Never lived a Yankee yet,
But was ready to bet
On the U. S. A.
If you speak of Italy's sunny clime,
"Maine kin beat it every time!"
If you tell of Ætna's fount of fire,
You rouse his ire.
In an injured way
He'll probably say,
"I don't think much of a smokin' hill,
We've got a moderate little still
Kin make your old volcaner still;
Pour old Niagery down the crater,
'N' I guess 'twill cool her fiery nater."

You have doubtless heard of those ancient lies,
Manufactured for a prize;
The reputation of each rose higher,
As he proved himself the biggest liar.

Said an Englishman—"Only t'other day,
Sailing from Dover to Calais,
I saw a man without f[illegible] or oar
Swimming across from English shore,
Manfuly breasting the angry sea—"
"Friend," said the Yankee, "that was me!"

Mindful of all these thrice-told tales,
Whenever a Yankee to Europe sails,
The boys try every sort of plan
To rouse his astonishment if they can.

Sam Brown was a fellow from way down east,
Who never was staggered in the least.
No tale of marvelous beast or bird,
Could match the stories he had heard.
No curious place or wondrous view
"Was ekal to Podunk, I tell yu."
They showed him a room where the queen had slept;
'Twant "up to the tavern daddy kept."
They showed him Lucerne. But he had drunk
From the beauuiful Mollichunkamunk.
They took him at last to ancient Rome,
And inveigled him into a catacomb.

Here they plied him with draughts of wine,
(Though he vowed old cider was twice as fine),
Till the fumes of Falernian filled his head,
And he slept as sound as the silent dead.
They removed a mummy to make him room,
And laid him at length in the rocky tomb.

They piled old skeletons round the stone,
Set a "dip" in a candlestick of bone,
And left him to slumber there alone,
Then watched from a distance the taper's gleam,
Waiting to jeer at his frightened scream,
When he should awake from his drunken dream.

After a time the Yankee awoke,
But instantly saw through the flimsy joke;
So never a shout or a cry he uttered;
But solemnly rose and slowly muttered:
"I see how it is. It's the judgment day,
We've all been dead and stowed away;
All these stone furriners sleepin' yet,
An' I'm the first one up, you bet!
Can't none of you Romans start, I wonder?
United States is ahead, by thunder!"

Glycerine.

The name is derived from a Greek word signifying "sweet," and has reference to taste. As oil consists of acids and glycerine, the latter is obtained by separating the oil—the same is true of fat—into its component parts.

The uses of glycerine are becoming more and more extended and valuable. There is no application that is better than a few drops rubbed daily over the hands, to keep them moist and smooth. The hands should be first moistened with water, as the glycerine otherwise absorbs moisture from the skin.

Glycerine and carbolic acid—three ounces of the former to fifteen grains of the latter—are among the most effective applications for chapped hands, and equally for a scurfy skin. It may be used two or three times a day.

Glycerine is is also said to be exceedingly effective in some cases of piles. A gentleman who had suffered from them for years, and whose case appeared to defy medical treatment, was cured by taking it daily with his food. A dose would be from a half to a whole tablespoonful.

Writers in the London Lancet strongly recommend it for acidity of stomach. Its use for this trouble was first discovered by a private gentleman, who had long been a sufferer from it. Having read in the paper that glycerine kept milk from souring, he said to himself, "Why won't it keep me?"

He tried it with complete success, and was able thenceforth to take food from which he had been forced to abstain. It was subsequently employed by physicians with like results.

It does not remove acidity; it only prevents its occurrence. Take from a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful immediately after eating, or take it in the tea in place of sugar.

About Style.

Perhaps even more women might rise to positions of distinction in many occupations suitable for them were it not for the tax on their time and strength consequent on the demands of dress and fashion. With many women dress in all its details and necessities of shopping, fitting, etc., is a business requiring an average of three or four hours daily. Subtract this from the hours of a working-day and it involves a great loss of valuable time and strength. A woman thoroughly devoted to any art cannot dress after the regulation style and pattern. If the man desires to step out on the street for any purpose he puts on his coat and goes. If the woman so goes out it involves an outlay of at least fifteen or twenty minutes time to "fix up." There are exceptions, but this is the rule. Dress and the requirements and encumbrances of fashion prove a constant draught, impediment and encumbrance on the woman's time and strength—the young and pretty woman being here referred to. In this age of competition success in any occupation must be gained at the cost of constant, unintermitting attention and perseverance. The working editor, merchant, lawyer or artist cannot go with gloved hands, and he often gains time at the expense of a well-worn coat in the public thoroughfare. Almost without being aware of the motive, man's garb has, during the last hundred years, more and more adapted itself to the practical needs of business. Even the dandy of to-day copies the general style of the worker. How much business of any description would a man now accomplish if clad in the ribbons, frills and ruffles of the court popinjays of Charles the Second's time? Yet, relative to her own peculiar fashion, the woman retains all the encumbrances of that era.

An advertisement in a country paper commenced thus: "To be let immediately, or sooner, if necessary—"

A young lady who had ordered a pair of unusually high-heeled boots was flushed by the announcement by Bridget, fresh from answering the door bell: "If ye plaze, miss, there's a man in the hall below wid a pair of sthilts for yez."

Johnny kissed me when we met,
Jumping from the car he sat in;
Mrs. Grundy—you who get
Gossip in your list—put that in,
Say I'm Tomboy—say I'm mad—
Say that modesty has left me;
Say—but don't forget to add—
Johnny kissed me!

Mother of esthetic young lady at Long Branch—"Julia, you haven't been in bathing yet?" Julia—"No, mamma." Mother—"What is the reason?" Julia—"I don't like to tell, mamma." Mother—"Stuff! let me know at once." Julia (blushing)—"Because Mr. DeLacy's dog comes down to look at me every time I go to the bath-house, and I know Mr. DeLacy sends him."

"That is the smartest dog that ever walked on four legs," exclaimed the deacon enthusiastically. His visitor whistled for the animal to draw near, and when it approached stroked it affectionately, and asked for some proof of his intelligence. "It's a secret," returned the deacon, "but I'm willing to tell you in confidence. Whenever the parson calls while I am out, that dog sits close to the parlor door and never takes its eye from the key-hole."

Curious Habits.

Great men often fall into curious habits, which they find it impossible to conquer. Augustus Hare, one of the ripest scholars in the English pulpit, and a refined gentleman, when he had ended a train of hard thinking, would spin around on his heel a few seconds and then resume work again. Neandor, the famous church historian, could not lecture to his students unless he had a goose-quill to pull to pieces as he talked, and it was necessary to supply a second goose-quill when the first was completely stripped. William Wilberforce became so absorbed in conversation in evening companies as to forget himself. He would lift himself from his chair in his earnestness, move forward a little, and gradually approach perilously near to the edge. It was a tradition in fashionable English circles that he had fallen several times to the floor. But in families where he was loved it was the custom to station one of the older children behind his chair to move it forward as he moved, and guard him against peril. Some who afterward became leaders in English society retained among the pleasant memories of childhood recollection of the services rendered to the brilliant and eloquent converser.

THE DEERING!

First Born of all the Twine Binders,

Views with pleasure the efforts of its children to emulate the virtues of their progenitor.

We work for no blue ribbon,
No competition fearing;
We rest our cause entirely upon
The merits of the Deering.

We were the first to bind with twine,
Perfection ever nearing;
Old fogy machines got left behind
When farmers saw the Deering.

Probably no harvesting machine has [illegible] so widely at the head of its class as the Deering Twine Binder stands to-day. Acknowledgements of its superiority come from all quarters, not merely from those who use them, but even competing agents and manufacturers are forced by their own convictions to confess its admirable qualities.

The many reasons why a sensible, economical farmer selects the DEERING in preference to all others:

1st. Because in the field no Binder has been so reliable, so free from breakages.

2d. The season of 1882 was one Grand Triumph for the Deering. In spite of the tangled and fallen condition of the grain, it picked up and bound it cleaner and more perfectly than could have been done by hand.

3d. In field trials and at fairs it has been universally successful, carrying off more prizes than any other machine made,

4th. It was the ONLY Binder last Harvest that separated every sheaf in the worst tangled grain.

5th. The binding is entirely automatic, requiring no attention for operation, no foot-trip to operate, no moving the binder backward and forward to find the grain, no movable disc to hunt for the bundles to be tied, but all the grain goes to its proper place and is bound in neat round sheafs of exactly the same size.

6th. Every sheaf is tightly compressed first, and then tied in a firm unyielding band of twine.

7th. There is no strain whatever on the twine in tying.

8th. ITS NEW KNOT-TYER CONTAINS LESS PIECES OF CLOCK-WORK THAN ANY OTHER SERVICEABLE BINDER MADE, thus enabling a farmer's daughter of 12 years to operate the Harvester and Binder as readily as she could a skipping-rope.

9th. There is no reel made that has so wide a scope of adjustment as the Deering Binder Reel. It can be placed in over one hundred different positions while in operation.

10th. The Deering Binder is the most durable and at the same time the lightest draft.

11th. In its manufacture only the best materials are used and the most skilled workmen are employed, therefore it does not get out of repair.

12th. The Harvester can be raised and lowered and tilted on the main and grain wheel in a greater distance than any other in the field.

13th. The Deering has been often tried, never denied, and ready and willing to be tried again.

It has many improvements for 1883, and is by all odds the best finished machine in the market. It is sold exactly on its merits, and its agents do not resort to dishonorable acts to make sales.

J. R. CAIRNS & SON, TECUMSEH, Mich.: JACKSON, Mich., April 30, 1883.

GENTLEMEN—Replying to your favor of 28th inst., permit me to say that I am surprised that you or any intelligent men whatever, would notice for a moment the story told by your competitors that all the Deering Binders sent into Michigan this year were 1882 machines painted over. Surely your competing Binders must be without any substantial merits to recommend them to the farmers of Lenawee county, if their agents are obliged to resort to such dirty work as this in order to make their sales.

You are hereby authorized to use my name at any and all times to pronounce such statements as wilfull and deliberate falsehoods, told by men who know they are lying when they peddle such stuff.

So far from this being the case, Mr. Deering is now running his shops on his twelvth thousand for 1883, double the number of any other manufacturer. Is it likely or probable that he would build so many if he had been forced to carry over the amount stated by your competing friends, or even one-half, or one-fourth as many.

The truth of the matter is, Mr. Deering has not been able to fill all his orders at any time since he has commenced building his present perfect binder; and now with his force turning out 300 of those new knotters every day, he can't begin to fill his orders. I am waiting now for machines for Michigan, where orders were sent in three weeks ago.

As to our new knotter being an experiment, I ask you as a candid man, if it is at all reasonable, or to be thought of for a moment, that Mr. Deering, knowing that he had already the best binder in the world, would invest $150,000 in putting this knotter on 15,000 binders if it was only an experiment. No, indeed it has been thoroughly tested in every possible condition of grain in the heavy straw of 1882, and the green wheat in Texas in 1883.

We warrant it the best knot-tyer for Binders now known.

Now in conclusion, allow me to suggest that you will not under any circumstances, and I know you are too far above such, resort to the dirty, slimy work, by which some machines are forced on the market. Mr. Deering has, by twenty-five years of straightforward, honorable conduct, built up one of the finest industries in the United States, and cannot afford to wreck it by conducting his business in an unbusiness-like manner such as you speak of." He can, and will meet all honorable competition, but when it becomes necessary to resort to trickery and very questionable methods, to sell his machines, he will withdraw them from the market and retire from their manufacture.

Very Truly Yours,

JESSE L. BERCH,
GENERAL AGENT.

Miscellaneous Recipes.

Baked Egg Plant.—Trim off the stem end and boil the egg-plant for twenty minutes in salt-water, and then lay in the colander to drain until perfectly cold, peel open and take out the seed, mash the egg-plant smooth, pouring off any water that comes, and add to it half a grated nutmeg, a saltspoonful of white pepper, half a teaspoonful of salt, teacupful of milk, a teaspoonful of butter, two eggs, and bread-crumbs enough to make a thick batter; if; bake for twenty minutes in the dish you will serve it in; two tablespoonfuls of minced ham is an improvement.

To Cook a White fish—Choose one that weighs about seven or eight pounds, boil it until it is done, then take out all the bones; take a quart of sweet milk, two onions, and a little summer savory; boil until the milk is thoroughly seasoned, thicken it with flour, using enough to make a thin paste, add butter, pepper and salt to suit your taste. Then put in a pudding dish a layer of fish and a layer of dressing; cover the top with rolled cracker, as you do escalloped oysters, bake for three quarters of an hour, or until the top is a golden brown. Serve with mashed potatoes, spiced currants and the vegetables of the season.

Cream to Use with Layer Cake.—Take one pound of blanched almonds, pound to a paste, one coffee cup of thick sour cream, two tablespoonfuls of corn starch scalded in a little sweet milk, beat all together and spread between the layers of cake; flavor with a little almond extract. This is very rich, and is suitable for the nicest kinds of cake. For more common use an inviting cream may be made in this way: Take a pint of sweet milk, thicken it with half a cup of corn starch, add half a cup of sugar, and boil until the cream or custard is of the consistency of starch. When almost cool add one tablespoonful of lemon and vanilla and spread between the layers of cake.

Pancakes for Luncheon.—These are made of eggs, flour and milk. The just proportions are one tablespoonful of flour to each egg. To make small pancakes, beat two eggs thoroughly and add sweet milk. Then take two tablespoonfuls of flour, work into a thin paste and double batter by adding the milk and eggs and a little salt. Grease the pan with a piece of sweet lard or butter and stir briskly to prevent adhering to the bottom. When the under side is sufficiently browned, turn it. Leave the cakes folded, with sugar or honey and butter between the folds, or sugar alone. If this be too solid, add more eggs and use less flour. A slight sprinkle of grated nutmeg will be an addition.

Plain Duff.—You may call it steam pudding. You can make it in a jiffy, and the only time it takes is the boiling of it. You are caught sometimes, and if pudding is the word this is the way to get out of it. One quart of flour, sifted, a teacupful of currants and a tablespoonful of baking powder, and a pint of suet; mix them well first, and then add enough cold water to make a stiff batter; put her in a pudding tin cover her with a cloth, and let her go in a steam boiler for one hour and a half. If you want a richer duff, just go through the same thing, adding the yolks of five eggs and a tablespoonful of butter. The Sauce—You see you ain't got no sugar in them. This here sauce is quick, too. You want two tablespoonfuls of butter, and just a trifle less of sifted flour, and you grate a quarter of a nutmeg into it, and you add a teaspoonful of vanilla extract, or half a teaspoonful of lemon essence, and a whole teacupful of granulated sugar. Now smooth it all together, adding teaspoonfuls of warm water from time to time as you boil it until you get it to the thickness you want; but after all, I've seen many a nice lady take that sauce and then dash molasses on the whole thing and say molasses was the best.

The Sexton Writes Us.

Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now a well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc.,

Mind the corner where life's road turns.

One Experience from Many.

I have been sick and miserable so long and had caused my husband so much trouble and expense, no one seemed to know what ailed me, that I was completely disheartened and discouraged. In this frame of mind I got a bottle of Hop Bitters and used them unknown to my family. I soon began to improve and gained so fast that my husband and family thought it strange and unnatural, but when I told them what had helped me, they said, "Hurrah for Hop Bitters! long may they prosper, for they have made mother well and us happy."—The Mother.

THE NEW PATENT DUST-PROOF Stem Winding Open Face Case, MANUFACTURED BY THE AMERICAN WATCH CO., WALTHAM, MASS.

This case is formed in one solid piece without joint or seam, opening in front only, thus avoiding the usual cap, and securing greater strength and durability.

These watches are all open face. The bezel, into which an extra strong crystal is fitted with an especially prepared water-proof cement, is attached to the case by screwing it to the frame, and thus forms an air-tight junction with the body of the case, which is proof against dust and moisture.

To railroad men, travelers, miners, lumbermen and others who are almost constantly exposed and who have to make frequent reference to the watch, these qualities are of the utmost importance.

The following letters tell their own story.

VALDOSTA, Georgia, July 20, 1882.

"I sold one of your Patent Dust Proof Cases about ten months ago, and the other day it came back to me with the request to make it wind easier. On examination I found that the stem was rusty, and I inquired into the cause of it. The gentleman stated to me that he was starting some sawlogs that had lodged in the bend of the river, when his chain caught in a bush and threw his watch into about twelve feet of water, and he was about two hours finding it. When he got it out it was running and he thought all right. In about three months he found that the stem was hard to turn and sent it to me.

I can say that the watch is all that the company claims for it and recommend it to all railroad and mill men.

B. W. BENTLEY."

CLINTON, Iowa, April 29, 1881.

"I wish you would send me a spring for the Wm. Ellery Watch * * * By the way this Ellery is a watch I sold in your Screw Bezel Case to a farmer last fall. The first of January he lost the watch in the woods, and found it this week in about one foot of water. It had lain three months and over in snow and water, with but slight injury to the watch—only a hair-spring.

C. S. RAYMOND."

The above were very severe tests, and demonstrate beyond doubt, that for any reasonable length of time during which a watch might be under water it would receive no injury whatever.

We make these cases in both gold and silver, and as a Perfectly Dust-Proof Stem Winding Watch Case, Challenge the World to Produce its Equal.

His system is the most correct one, and injures the animal less than any other method. He is indorsed by the best horsemen in the country, as a safe and reliable operator. Parties can secure his services by leaving a card. Will also spay domestic animals, and teach the art. Send for testimonials and descriptive circular. The above cut illustrates his method of securing the animal for operation, which effectually prevents injury to the animal or operator. Address, J. W. LUCAS, Battle Creek, Mich.

In 1764, England had over 30,000 negro slaves, and they wore collars like dog collars.

In 1852 the United States produced only 2,000,000 tons of coal, while in 1880 about 70,000,000 tons were produced.

Among the Athenians the perforation of the ears was a mark of nobility; with the Hebrews and Romans it indicated servitude.

The Ashantee of Africa, like the ancient Greeks, when he drinks spills a little of the liquor on the ground as an offering to the gods.

The guanaco of Patagonia is described as having the head of a camel, the body of a deer, wool of a sheep and neigh of a horse.

Dogs in a state of nature never bark; they whine or growl. The explosive noise is only found among those which have been domesticated.

In England, in the time of Alfred, every man was a soldier. No slave was permitted to carry arms. The very gift of a weapon conferred freedom.

Some animals have regular cemeteries to which they retire to die. The llama of South America has its district cemeteries, in which bones are found bleaching in great numbers.

By means of a French patent process, an excellent substitute for coffee is made out of dates. It is said to taste so much like the genuine article that only by analysis can the difference be detected.

There is no portion of the United States that will not produce apples and pears.

In a good year the Chinese send to England as much as $25,000,000 worth of silk alone.

A cow wintered upon two tons and a half of hay will produce not far from five tons of manure, provided she be well littered and none of the excrement be wasted.

Worth, the famous dress-maker, is said to have a large aviary filled with beautiful birds of every hue from all parts of the world, and he spends hours in studying them. From these he derives his inspiration for dresses.

Dampness and dew are fatal to young turkeys. Therefore they should be kept in coops until the dew is off the grass. A great many young turkeys die from this cause, while breeders wrongly ascribe their death to improper food.

Too much land is the curse of many farmers. One acre well cultivated and well fertilized, will yield more profit than four acres half cultivated and with the same fertilizer spread over it which should be applied to one acre.

A boy can imagine almost anything; he can lug an old shot gun about all day without firing at a living thing, and be under the impression that he is having a good time. But all attempts to induce a boy to imagine that he's killing Indians when he is sawing wood have proved futile.—Boston Post.

An English authority states that water-cresses, cooked in the same way as cabbages or any other green vegetable, form a most acceptable dish. They come to the table very tender and of a dark-green color, and are nicer than spinach. Those who live near a running stream may have a never-ending supply of water-cresses, it being only necessary to scatter the seed along the banks.

What the Minister Says.

Homer, Ill.

Mr. A. Kiefer—My Dear Sir:—I have been afflicted for the last four years with derangement of the Liver, causing Dyspepsia, Headache, Nausea, and general derangement of the whole system. I have tried a great many preparations, but found no relief until I tried one bottle of your Taraxine, which has permanently cured me. I also found it to be good for the Ague. I commend it to all who suffer with derangement of the liver. Very truly yours, Rev. Thomas Whitlock.

For sale by all druggists.

A Cincinnati barber committed suicide the other day by cutting his throat with a razor. He took his own medicine like a man.

Ely's Cream Balm, for the cure of Catarrh, Hay Fever and Cold in Head, is an article of decided merit, possessing wonderful cleansing and healing properties. Price 50c.

Apply into nostrils with little finger.

I have been a sufferer for years with Catarrh, and under a physicians treatment for over a year. Elys' Cream Balm gave me immediate relief. I believe I am entirely cured. G. S. Davis, First National Bank, Elizabeth, N. J.

Ely's Cream Balm, for the cure of Catarrh, Hay Fever, Cold in the Head, &c., is selling largely with me. I take pleasure in advising my patrons to use it. I hear the most favorable reports of its curative effects. L. S. Coman, Druggist, Bay City, Mich.

The result of comparatively low rates of interest and the fostering care which the British Government has always shown towards her shipping is demonstrated in the enormous expansion of her merchant marine, which now reaches the proportions of 16,000,000 tons, valued at $500,000,000, with gross annual earnings of $225,000,000. The combined tonnage of all other nations does not exceed 11,000,000 tons. It is a noteworthy fact that while British sailing tonnage has materially decreased during the last ten years, there has during the same period been a remarkable increase of British steam tonnage. Thus ten years ago Great Britain had 1,500,000 tons of steam shipping; she now (1881) has about three-fifths of the entire steam shipping of the world.

Testimony From the Press.

To those afflicted with lung trouble, hear what V. W. Wilson, of the Ottowa (Ill.) Times says: "After being disabled for three months with a cough, and lung trouble, often spitting up blood, can testify that I am cured permanently by the use of Dr. Bigelow's Positive Cure." Griggs' Glycerine Salve.

The best on earth can truly be said of Griggs' Glycerine Salve, which is a sure cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. Will positively cure piles, tetter and all skin eruptions. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Only 25 cents. For sale by Baker & Hall.

Rheumatic SYRUP.

The Greatest Blood Purifier Known!

A positive cure for Rheumatism, in all its various forms, viz., Chronic, Acute, Inflammatory, Sciatica, and Muscular Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Gout.

An infallible Remedy for all diseases of the Skin and Blood, such as Tetter, Ringworm, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Scrofula, Pimples, Blotches, etc.

It restores the deranged Liver and Kidneys to a healthy action, and dissolves and expels from the blood all the acrid poison, or "acrate of Lime" contained therein, which is the sole cause of all Rheumatic and Neuralgic Pains. Manufactured by RHEUMATIC SYRUP CO., Rochester, N. Y. For sale everywhere. Send for circular.

Rheumatic Syrup Co.: Batavia, March 10, 1882.

Gentlemen: I take this opportunity to express my gratitude for what your Rheumatic Syrup has done for me. After suffering with the rheumatism in my shoulders, so I could hardly get my coat on without help, a friend induced me to try one bottle of Rheumatic Syrup. After taking it I could see such a decided change that I continued its use a short time and it cured me.

The Civil Service commission should have a fair show. The old spoils system cannot be abolished in a day. It will take time. Give the commission a chance.

Colorado is judged in the east by her bonanza senators? But a Denver paper says they are thought so little of at home that they are exiled to the U. S. Senate.

The population of New York city has doubled six times within a century, or once every seventeen years, and its growth is more rapid now than ever before.

Chas. A. Dana, the veteran editor of the New York Sun, is mentioned as a possible Democratic candidate for the presidency. The party could go farther and fare much worse.

"My Lord Roscoe" thinks the country was set back ten years by the defeat of the third term scheme at Chicago. But there are a great many good people in this country who will disagree with him.

Joe Brady was hanged last Monday in Dublin for complicity in the Phœnix Park murders. Johnny Bull still keeps a weather eye on the family however, for Brady has twenty-four brothers and sisters still unhung.

Vanderbilt and Gould have both retired from Wall street, and it is fancied in many quarters that the little fish will stand a little better show now. Some prophets of evil are predicting a big financial crash in consequence of their withdrawal.

Mrs. Theresa Fair, the wife of Senator Fair, of Nevada, has just obtained a divorce from her husband with four million dollars alimony thrown in. That's a pretty fair allowance for the fair Mrs. Fair, but it seems hardly fair on Mr. Fair to make him swallow that kind of fare.

Michigan has hitherto been almost entirely exempt from the disastrous cyclones that sweep over the western prairies and the low land of the South. But last Monday St. Joseph and Branch counties were visited by a hurricane which destroyed a large amount of property and injured many persons.

The Singer Sewing Machine company is about to close its immense works, employing about 3,000 men, at Elizabeth, New Jersey. The company is building a large factory at Kilbowie, Scotland, and the machines for the European trade, now made at Elizabeth will be manufactured in that country. This shows how a protective tariff builds up manufactures in this country. When the home demand is supplied they go abroad, where trade is free, to make goods for foreign markets.

The New York World has been purchased by Joseph Pulitzer, the brilliant newspaper man who has lately managed the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. The first issue under his management which appeared last Friday, was a marked improvement. Jay Gould has sold his entire interest in the paper, and Pulitzer will conduct it as an independent Democratic sheet. It will belong to no stock jobber or monopolist, and will be the organ of none of the city factions. The change is a good omen for Democratic harmony and supremacy in New York.

The Savannah News puts the matter of a tariff for revenue with incidental protection clearly when it says:

"The purpose of a protective tariff is to prevent importation, and the moment that the tariff begins to have this effect it prevents revenue. Hence where protection begins there revenue ends. There is no such thing as a tariff for revenue with incidental protection. When it begins to have a protective influence it ceases to be a revenue tariff. The talk of high tariffites about 'incidental protection' is a jugglery of words to make their monstrosity seem partially plausible. Congressman McKinley, of Ohio, fully expressed the protective idea when he said he was 'in favor of a tariff for protection with incidental revenue.'"

Ionia County Agricultural society will have a "children's day" during the fair next October; meantime, the boys and girls will be getting their calves, sheep, chickens, butter, fancy work, etc., ready for competition. Splendid idea.

The immigration into Huron peninsula is very large this spring; all the new comers seem to have plenty of means and the most of them are successful farmers, mostly from Ohio, Ontario and the southern part of the state.

The Central Michigan agricultural society has decided to hold a second spring fair for the exhibition and sale of all kinds of farm implements and machinery, May 29 to June 1. There will be speed trials each day, 13 premiums ranging from $100 to $500 being offered. Address Ben. B. Baker, secretary, Lansing.

Muskegon is reminded of the blood plague that troubled one Pharoah of Egypt, some centuries ago. The water from many of the wells in that city is apparently A 1 on being pumped, but turns red when boiled, and black when tea is put into it. Black tea is one answer to the mystery.

Mrs. Minnie Beaty, of Saginaw City, is suing Frank Swartout's father for $35 damages for being knocked down by Frank's velocipede and receiving injuries which confined her to the bed five days. The collision occurred on a sidewalk; and it is claim- Mrs. Beaty dodged in front of the velocipede, making the accident unavoidable.

Minneapolis Harvester
AND
Twine Binder.
The only Binder Manufactured having
MR. APPLEBY'S Latest Improvements.

The record this popular binder made last season in Lenawee Co., is abundantly ample evidence to convince any farmer that this is the latest improved, easiest handled and by far the most perfect working Harvester and Binder in the market. Mr. J. F. Appleby, the inventer of the Appleby Binder superintends the construction of the Minneapolis, and with the improvements of 1883, especially the double packer trip, it is thoroughly adapted to the wants of the Michigan farmer, as there is a great variation in the size and condition of our grain the Binder can be moved instantly and easily, also the raising and lowering of the whole machine by the driver in his seat.

The machine has all the valuable points that any other has and many very vital points that no other machine has. Last season we sold 32 of these machines to some of the best farmers in this vicinity and we have a good testimonial from every one of them, besides others that own other binders that have seen the superior working of the Minneapolis acknowledge its superiority over all others. No other Binders ever sold in Lenawee Co. can produce such a record.

Three or four railroad men spent last night in the "cooler" for creating a disturbance on the streets.

Three inmates of the Girls' Industrial Home at Adrian made their escape last Saturday and footed it to Tecumseh. Their absence was discovered within half an hour after they left. Sheriff Bidwell was at once notified by telephone, and he started with a deputy or two in pursuit. The girls were verhauled in Tecumseh immediately after their arrival here, and were at once returned to the Home. They had a pretty good tramp and learned a good lesson.

P. W. Adams and his daughter, Mrs. Emmet, are in town for a few days.—Mr. Adams is now located on a fine fruit farm in Delaware, which is conducted by himself and Mr. Emmet.—He has two thousand peach trees on the place and a large quantity of small fruit of different kinds. The farm is only two hours ride by boat from Philadelphia, where most of his marketing is done. They expect to remain here two or three weeks.

Mr. O. Emlay, of Oakland, Cal., arrived in town last week accompanied by his wife and two children. Mr. Emlay left Tecumseh for California ten years ago next month, and this is his first visit to his old home. He will make Tecumseh his headquarters for a few weeks, shooting out to Jackson, Detroit and Canada to visit friends in those places, and will return to the Pacific in July next. He is engaged in the harness business at Oakland and is enjoying life and a lucrative trade.

MORE NEW CARDS.

Eight more new patrons have their say,
And swing out their new "ads" to-day:
Go—first and foremost on the list—
To Wilson Brothers with your grist.
All blacksmith work, in first-class style,
Is neatly done by Thomas Kyle;
To Marks & Russell you should go
For paints and oils and drugs also:
And C. A. Keil outsells them all
In paper to adorn the wall;
Old men and matrons, youthful sprigs,
To Bidwell's go for livery rigs;
All staple groceries, we'd remark,
Can be procured of Mr. Clark;
To get your horses shod tip-top,
Just call at Elliott's blacksmith shop;
While Sparks' machine rooms are a sight,
Stacked with Domestic and with White.

Installation Services.

A large congregation assembled at the Presbyterian church last evening to witness the installation services of Rev. Wm. H. Babbitt as pastor of the church. Rev. A. W. Sanford of Erie, presided and put the constitutional questions. Rev. G. H. Wallace of Manchester preached the sermon. Rev. W. W. Macomber, of Monroe, gave the charge to the pastor and Rev. I. H. Barkley of Hillsdale, the charge to the people. The choir, under the leadership of Mr. Strong furnished excellent music for the occasion. The ladies had tastefully decorated the platform with flowers and plants, and the services throughout were greatly enjoyed by those who were present.

A New Race Circuit.

A meeting of the horsemen of this section was held at Hudson on Tuesday last and a circuit for a series of races established for the towns of Hudson, Adrian, Morenci, Tecumseh and Brooklyn. Five meetings, of three days each, one meeting in each town will be held, and will directly involve about $4,500. The meetings have been scheduled as follows:

Hudson, second week in June; Morenci, third week; Adrian, fourth week; Tecumseh, first week in July; Brooklyn, second week.

Lawrence park in Adrian, has been leased for the races, in that city, and $150 has been raised to put the track in condition.

Mr. Bills has put his track in prime condition, and our horseman can expect to see some good racing at the July meeting.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAY 17, 1883.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

This is nice weather.

Everybody busy these days.

Don't forget Blind Boone's concert to-morrow evening.

The late rains have been a fine thing for the wheat crop.

The telephone line from Adrian west has reached Hudson.

Col. Drew is making extensive repairs on his hotel at Blissfield.

A local telephone exchange will be organized very soon at Hudson.

Theme at Baptist church next Sunday evening—"The Life of Cain."

Mrs. F. C. Stoepel is spending a few days at her old home in Tecumseh.

T. S. Applegate of the Adrian Times has returned from his Washington trip.

Chas. Lawrence has taken a clerkship in Henry McClure's grocery store.

Mr. E. Hand spent last Sunday with his son, "Ell", on his farm near Deerfield.

Mr. & Mrs. Bump, of Milwaukee, Wis., are visiting Mrs. H. E. Stout for a few days.

B. F. Reynolds and Ed. Wilson started yesterday for Texas with several more cars of sheep.

A. H. French, traveler for Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., paid the HERALD his compliments yesterday.

Mrs. Ed. Leaur, of Monroe, is spending a few days in Tecumseh as the guest of the Misses Smith.

John S. Kinney is in Muskegon looking after a fruit farm owned by himself and Gus Slayton.

The reaping machine and binder agents of Tecumseh are having a red hot campaign this season.

Dr. Stewart and A. W. Slayton are looking up the hard wood timber land in the vicinity of Petoskey.

Seth Sheldon of Wayne Co., N. Y., has purchased the Widow Clark's farm in Newburg, and is now taking possession.

Col. Eldredge and wife have gone on a trip to Washington and other eastern cities. They expect to remain for some time.

A daughter of H. S. Bowen, of Rollin, had a brass button removed from her ear last week, which had been there thirty years.

A little circus in the street last Friday when Burt Crittenden's horse jumped over another one and smashed things up generally.

Peter Sharp, of Ridgeway, was seventy-three years old last Monday.—He is still hale and hearty and attends to his business cares as well as ever.

An exchange rather sarcastically remarks that a "dude" is, compared with a man of brains, what a tea store chromo is to a $50,000 painting by an old master.

The new liquor tax law of Ohio went into force last week and it is said that many of the smaller saloons will be obliged to close up from inability to pay the tax.

E. C. Coryell is making improvments on his farm this spring in the shape of a new barn, and many other things that will make his property one of the finest farms in the county.

Geo. P. Sparks has removed his sewing machine rooms to the store lately occupied by the insurance company. This room will make an elegant office for him. See his new ad.

Ed. Clark and Frank Bird have purchased Dexter's livery stable, and take possession at once. It is their intention to add several new rigs and run one of the best equipped liveries in the county.

Eight of John T. Noyes & Co's. men of Buffalo, N. Y., arrived and commenced work on Heck Bros'. mill yesterday. We understand that the work will be pushed with all possible speed and will soon be completed.

Last Thursday we rode home from Clinton with E. G. Cook down around the west side of the river to take a look at his farm, and we saw one of the nicest farms in the county. He is building new fences and making other necessary improvements, and in his fashion does nothing by halves.

HEADQUARTERS CO. C.,
1st REG. M. S. T.
TECUMSEH, May 17, 1883.

CIRCULAR NO. 1:

All the members of this company are requested to be present at our next drill, May 23d, 1883, to complete arrangements for decoration day.

A. D. LAWRENCE,
Capt. Comdg. Co.

A. E. Kennedy,
1st Sergeant.

Another little industry has sprung up in Tecumseh which bids fair to be quite a concern and employ quite a number of men,—the broom factory of Claflin & Ralph, on Pearl St. The firm employs three hands, have a capacity of fifty dozen brooms per week and by making a superior broom have sold for all they can manufacture. Mr. Claflin has had many years experience in the business and we wish the concern the success it deserves.

Just the weather for planting corn.

A "phone" has been placed in the Clinton depot.

The Adrian papers are enthusiastic in praise of Blind Boone's concert.

Tornadoes and cyclones are becoming decidedly fashionable in the west and south.

A street railway is talked of at Adrian, and subscription books for stock have been opened.

Deerfield will have two saloons the coming year, E. H. Plunkett and F. Timmins having again taken out licenses.

The county treasurer has received from the state the primary school money belonging to Lenawee county, amounting to $30,022.05.

"Let the nimble little lambkins, prepare to skip o'er hillsides green," is the original and delicate strain uttered by the Saline Observer.

Dudes stand on Adrian street corners evenings and cover the walks with tobacco juice to the ruin of ladies' dresses. The Record manfully protests.

Several Hillsdale saloonists mistook May 1st for the first Monday in May (at which time their last year's bonds expired) and closed their doors during the balance of the week, thus losing 5 days business.

The village business is moving along quite smoothly, and it is pleasant to note the confidence reposed in the present administration. We know the business of the village will be transacted intelligently and honestly.

A blanket matinee will be held on Bills' track on Thursday of next week, May 24th, to commence at 2 P. M., sharp. Green race, three minute, and free for all; also a running race. This will be the first race of the season and horsemen should be on hand.

Hudson Gazette: Some heartless wretch caught two cats, tied them by the tails, and flung them into the celler of a church. The residents in the vicinity heard the noise the animals made, but supposed it was the choir rehearsing!

Manchester people are rejoicing over the discovery of several pieces of coal found at a depth of 32 feet while workmen were digging a well in that village. The Enterprise says that there is no doubt that a vain of coal underlies the village.

Oh! the skeeter, the beautiful skeeter, filing the air with beautiful meter: under our hat and tickling our nose, taking a bite through a hole in our clothes; in through the window, opening the door; filing our chamber, and singing the sweeter, ever is found the untiring muskeeter.

Something has been said we believe about its being very dry. Well, just let that subject drop for a few days. You've got all you can attend to now, setting out tubs, patching eave-troughs, hunting up missing conductors, etc. Rain!—yes, we should say it did. Good time for grass and grain and young ducks and such.

We acknowledge the receipt from H. C. Miller, of Conway, Emmet Co., Mich., of a fine lot of evergreen trees, just the right size for transplanting. They were hemlock, pine and arbor vitae. Mr. Miller deals very largely in evergreen trees of all kinds, and people wishing to purchase such trees in large quantities will find it to their advantage to correspond with him.—For further particulars address the postmaster at Conway, Emmet Co., Mich.

Dr. S. Catlin got home from Texas last Sunday, whither he went in company with Willis Merritt. The doctor was agreeably disappointed at the way Mr. Merritt endured the journey. They went via Toledo, St. Louis, Little Rock, Texarkana and Houston to Galveston. Willis will not remain there, however. He will go to San Antonio for a few days and thence into the north part of the state where the atmosphere is drier. The doctor is sanguine that a few months sojourn in Texas will wholly restore Mr. Merritt's health.

At Blind Boone's Concert given in Adrian a committee of twenty-five musicians were chosen to criticise the entertainment; and at its close they gave their report as follows:

The committee selected to report as to the claims made in behalf of Blind Boone, would report that in every respect the claims were upheld, and further, that we have not heard his equal, Blind Tom not being excepted. The conclusions of the committee were reached after a second hearing of Boone, upon the retirement of the audience, when the capabilities of the player were subject to further and exceedingly difficult tests, equally as to originality, imitation and power of execution.

Decoration Day is one of the best features of life in the United States. Because flowers are so fair and perishable they are the tenderest offering to both the living and dead. At the time when the garden is covered with sweet spring blossoms, and flowers are everywhere plentiful, it is delightful to see them distributed over the mounds to simply say, "You are not forgotten." It is to be hoped the custom of making one day memorable with flowers will never die, but will flourish as a faithful reminder of those whose heroic deeds should be sweetly and touchingly remembered.

Mr. Fred Curtis, of Wheatland, the well-known cattle breeder will soon open a banking house at Addison.

About twenty Morencites will go to Washington territory Aug. 1st, on the opening of the Northern Pacific railway.

Blind Boone's concert at Adrian last Friday evening was a great success. He is certainly a musical wonder, fully equal and by many thought to be superior to Blind Tom.

W. R. Wooden has gone into the raising of garden plants, etc., on his place in Brownville, and is making a success of it. His present location will be a very favorable one for that line of business.

"Cucumber green is the new and popular shade for ties," says a fashion exchange. Nothing could be more appropriate. Cucumber green and anything that can be tied in at least a double-bow knot will go well together.

Dealers in tobacco had their stock invoiced on May 1st. On old packages unbroken on that date, dealers are entitled to a rebate, they having purchased goods stamped under the old law, the law reducing the tax going into effect on the 1st inst.

For some reason there has been an exodus of sparrows from the city of Jackson. It is suggested that the intention of the glass ball club to use the little nuisances, instead of balls, at their contest, may have been brought to their attention and induced them to forsake the town.

The season has come again when the small boy needs reminding that the penalty for killing or robbing the nests of any of our song birds, is five dollars fine or ten days in the county jail. It is as well to say also, that this class of birds includes all our common sorts except blackbirds, bluejays and a few others.

This is the season of the year when the prudent man takes his little hatchet and goes out into the woods to gather sassafras roots, black cherry bark, etc. He will put a handfull of "roots and yarbs" in a half gallon of whisky and in about three days begin doctoring for the blood. Oh its clear ahead of Hostetter's.

But little building, but heaps of cleaning and changing and repairing. And the boys are all busy, from the boss carpenter down to the artiste with his brush and pail. If we can't build new castles and paint and gild like Gould & Co., we can remodel the old home and cover the plaster with alabaster, and make old wall figures yield to dado, frieze and field.

The cigar manufacturers claim they derive no benefit whatever from the reduction of the tax, the amount being divided between the makers and dealers. The result is the manufacturer pays more for having them made and gets less for them, while the smoker pays the same prices for the same cigars now that he did before the new law went into effect. Cigar-makers' wages have advanced from fifty cents to two dollars per thousand.

Press: The Salvation Army has for a week or more been praying in front of the Record counting room. Of course, the brace of sinners they are after are tough, and hardened, but there has been a visible change for the better, as they don't steal over a third of their items now. Still, so long as they give credit, with a "d—n it" in mental reservation, it is safe for the Salvation army to keep up the attack; it won't do to raise the siege before next Christmas, on that office.

A very agreeable party assembled at the residence of Judge S. C. Le Baron last week Tuesday evening to celebrate the marriage of his daughter Inez and Chas. F. Morley, and the evening was passed most pleasantly by the favored guests. There were many handsome presents, accompanied by the good wishes of the givers. Prominent among these was to be noticed a gift of silver and china from members of the Presbyterian church, in recognition of the services of Miss Le Baron as a member of the choir.

It is notorious that chronic jokers are always the most sensitive to jokes, when they themselves are the subjects. It is equally the case that those persons who busy themselves with abuse of better people, and think they inherit the privilege of coarsely criticising and snapping at the heels of the whole community, are the thinnest skinned and the readiest to dive into their kennel when their hides are tickled with a touch of retaliation. The immunity such mongrels enjoy comes from the fact that decent men and women do not think them worth the waste of a little ammunition.

A sensible young lady made the following request to her friends: "Do not lay me down by the rippling brook's side lest babbling lovers wake me from my dreams, nor in the beautiful cemeteries in the valleys, lest sight-seers, conning over with epitahs, distract me; but let my sleep be under the counter of the merchant and the business men generally who never advertise. There is the peace which passeth all understanding, and a deep sleep on which neither the buoyant footfall of youth nor the weary shuffle and drag of old age will ever intrude."

COUNTY CONDENSATIONS.

The Clinton Congregational choir have added a cornet and violin.

Porter C. Smith has purchased the Clinton livery stable.

The youngsters of Fairfield continue to come down with the measles.

The new Ogden grange is in a flourishing condition.

The Clinton town board will pay a bounty of ten cents for woodchuck scalps.

B. G. Randall, of Clinton, has gone to Detroit to receive treatment for rheumatism.

The Morenci Observer has sworn off on fish stories; that is, unless the fishermen divide.

A meeting will be held May 19, at Morenci to make arrangements for the big pioneer celebration.

The measles invaded the workmen in Stoners' saw mill, at Blissfield, and the mill was shut down for repairs.

J. C. Burroughs, of Clinton, found a piece of gold ore in a sand pile the other day. He sold it in Tecumseh for $2.75.

A sneak thief broke into Mr. Rowley's book store at Morenci while he was at dinner and jugged off $8.00 in silver.

The young ladies of the Congregational church at Morenci are getting up an autograph quilt. Every man in town is called upon for his name.

The barn of E. A. Perry, of Seneca, was struck by lightning last week, and both building and contents were entirely destroyed.

Scofield has been in business continuously in Morenci for 34 years, and he is said to be the only one of the original Morencites who have not retired or "busted."

The throttle valve of the engine at the stave mill at Deerfield got out of "kilter" one day last week, and the machinery ran away with itself. Considerable damage was done.

A legal controversy has arisen between the Clinton Woolen Co., and E. R. Smith, owner of the flouring mill, in regard to laying a water pipe from the race to the woolen mill.

Clinton News: If any of our exchanges which printed the Electric Light notices have got their portable electric light yet, we would like to borrow it, as ours hasn't come yet. What we most desire is "more light."

Blissfield Advance: The east side school closed last Friday for the season. If the school cannot be kept up any better than it has been for the past two years, it would be policy to close it up entirely. A little more interest manifested at the annual school meetings would perhaps remedy the matter some.

Morenci Observer: The veteran settler, Cyrenus Wheeley, of North Seneca, having cleared up one magnificent farm, has concluded to "clear up" another, and commenced operations on a wood lot opposite his old place this week. He thinks the job will last him just about two years, when he and his wife will celebrate their golden wedding.

Charles Lewis of Deerfield met with a fatal accident on the 5th inst. He was selling Hood's metal covers about the country and started that morning from Ypsilanti on his return trip home. While going down a steep hill, with gullys on each side, one of the irons fastening the tongue to the axle broke, which swung the wagon sideways, and Lewis was thrown to the bottom of the ditch. He struck upon his back with a box upon him, and received such injuries that he died in a few moments.

Clinton News: Uncle John Smalley had a narrow escape from drowning a few days ago. He went out in a boat on a lake on his farm and in some way lost his balance and fell partly in the water. In falling he caught hold of the seat with both hands and his feet remaining in the boat, so that all of his body was in the water but his feet, hands and head. Doubled up in this manner he was unable to extricate himself and lay in the water for nearly an hour before his cries brought the neighbors to his rescue. When found he was nearly exhausted and would have drowned in a few minutes longer.

Deerfield Record: On Monday evening, while Mr. and Mrs. L. Haviland, who live four miles south-west of this village, in Palmyra township, were away from home, their house caught fire and with contents was destroyed. They left their three children at home, and about 10 o'clock the oldest girl, Ollie, aged 13 years, fell asleep while reading a newspaper at the table, and in some way her clothing took fire from the lamp. She awoke, ran screaming out of the house and threw herself on the ground, but was seriously burned and has since died of her injuries. Freddie aged nine years, carried the eighteen month's old baby out of the house and both escaped unhurt. Mr. Haviland saw the fire, and hastening home, ran into the burning building to save his children, receiving severe injuries, before he knew they had been rescued.

DIED.

RANDALL.—On the morning of May 7, of chronic gastritis and kidney disease, Capt. A. L. Randall, in the 41st year of his age.

A. L. Randall will be remembered as the brother of Mrs. S. W. Anderson, and Mrs. Morris Primrose of this place. The deceased was buried from the residence of Mr. Morris Primrose of this place last Sunday, many ex-soldiers and friends being present to render him the last earthly tribute. The bearers were all boys from the old 4th Michigan.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Necessitating a Surgical Operation—Loving Mother Attempts to Take a Pair of Shears from Her Child.
PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner, of South Roundout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears, which [illegible] A severe struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying its sight. Her family physician did what he could, but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Upon inquiry to a woman having the care of a household in an irreservable condition, in this town Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., [illegible] was by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sister of the injured eye. But owing to pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation for health.

"Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by our druggists at one dollar a bottle.

SECRET.

THE ONLY DISSOLVER OF THE POISONOUS URIC ACID WHICH EXISTS IN THE BLOOD OF RHEUMATIC AND GOUTY PATIENTS.

SALICYLICA is known as a common-sense remedy, because it strikes directly at the cause of Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia, while so many so-called specifics and supposed panaceas only treat locally the effects.

It has been conceded by eminent scientists that outward applications, such as rubbing with oils, ointments, liniments and soothing lotions will not eradicate these diseases which are the result of the poisoning of the blood with Uric Acid.

SALICYLICA works with marvelous effect on this acid and so removes the disorder. It is now exclusively used by all celebrated physicians of America and Europe. Highest Medical Academy of Paris reports 95 per cent. cures in three days.

REMEMBER

that SALICYLICA is a certain cure for Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia. The most intense pains are subdued almost instantly.

Give it a trial. Relief guaranteed or money refunded.

Thousands of testimonials sent on application.

$1 a Box, 6 Boxes for $5.

Sent free by mail on receipt of money. Ask your druggist for it.

Do not be deluded into taking imitations or substitutes, or something recommended as "just as good." Insist on the genuine with the name of Washburne & Co., on each box, which is guaranteed chemically pure under our signature, an indispensable requisite to insure success in the treatment. Every Day Thoughts.

It is the sunlight from the human heart or from the world that renders our lives happy? What suffices wealth, ease and daily intercourse with friends if we are dissatisfied and discontented? Can we glean peace from anger or joy from bitterness of spirit?

God sends us ten thousand joys, but we will not stretch out our hands to grasp them; and yet we grieve that our days are so [illegible] ly going in and out, as it were, of eclipses. Yesterday jostles to-day and to-morrow carries them both away captive. Our mornings are spent in anticipating the afternoons, and our afternoons are spent in regretting our mornings. May God make us more patient to live. More patience is what we need to advance our happiness and the happiness of those around us. We all [illegible] depend upon each other for our happiness. Tenderness and attention to the outbreak of a pained heart will clear our way more fully, and the feeling of wrong, desperation and disquietude would be abated. Nothing draws us so fully and tenderly toward a person as their inquiries after our welfare and our enjoyments. To know that our happiness is studied by some unselfish creature brings exquisite pleasure—if we are not deformed by an ungrateful selfishness.

This is not a mere subject to dream and write about; as our actions here fix the nature of our enjoyment hereafter.

It is the sunlight from the human heart that renders true happiness—it is kind words and pleasant deeds that make the world bright and glorious.

From the open portals of Heaven come charity, love and faith; with these in our hearts we can diffuse kind words and do noble deeds, and from them glean pure happiness.

Books.

It is chiefly through books that we enjoy intercourse with superior minds, and these invaluable means of communication are within the reach of all. In the best books men talk to us, give us their most precious thoughts and pour their soul into ours.

God be thanked for books. They are voices of the distant, and the dead, and make us heirs of the spiritual life of past ages.

Books are the true levelers. They give to all who will faithfully use them, the society, the spiritual presence of the best and the greatest of our race. No matter how poor I am—no matter though the prosperous of my own time will not enter my obscure dwelling, if the sacred writers will enter and take up their abode under my roof, if Milton will cross my threshold and sing to me of Paradise, and Shakspere will open to me the world of imagination and the workings of the human heart, and Franklin enrich me with his practical wisdom, I shall not pine for want of intellectual companionship, and I may become a cultivated man though excluded from what is called the best society in the place where I live.—[Channing.

THE UNDERGROUND WORLD OF ENGLAND.—The proposed tunnel between England and France under the Channel has suggested the preparation of some interesting statistics in regard to what may be called the underground world of England. According to these figures the number of persons employed in English mines, many of whom live in them constantly, is more than three hundred and seventy thousand; in other words, there are men, women and children below the British soil sufficient to form one of the largest cities of second rank. The length of tunnelling in which they labor is set down at the extraordinary figure of nearly fifty nine thousand miles. The deepest gallery is at the level of twenty-eight hundred feet. These facts and figures are adduced in the support of the practicability of constructing and operating the Channel tunnel. The depth of the Channel, it seems, is nowhere more than one hundred and eighty feet, and taking this as a basis it is estimated that the lowest part of the tunnel would not be more than two hundred feet from the surface. If the engineers' figures and theories be correct the project is not only practicable but simple.—N. Y. Herald.

In winter there is a novel method of capturing herring. Like mackerel, they go in schools, and for some reason they will always follow a light. Two or three fishermen provide themselves with torches made of birch bark or cotton batting saturated with kerosene oil, and on dark nights row along the shores with a torch in the bow of the boat. The boat is rowed as swiftly as possible, and when a "school" is struck the chase begins. The herring dart after the boat, coming close up to it in swarms, and while one of the men rows the other dips up the herring with a dip net.

Another Life Saved.

Mrs Harriett Cummings, of Cincinnati, Ohio, writes:—Early last winter my daughter was attacked with a severe cold which settled on her lungs. We tried several medicines, none of which seemed to do her any good, but she continued to get worse, and finally raised large amounts of blood from her lungs. We called in a family physician, but he failed to do her any good. We then [illegible] in a physician, a most skillful professor in one of our colleges—he said that she could not get well. At this time a friend who had been cured by Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, advised me to give it a trial. We then got a bottle, and before she had used it all up she began to improve, and by the use of three bottles was entirely cured.

Rush's Medical Association:

Dear Doctors—The three bottles of Dr. Rush's Regulator I ordered were received by express last week. I have taken nearly one bottle, and am highly satisfied with the result. For over two years I have been troubled with sharp pain at my heart. My physician, upon examination, pronounced it enlargement of the heart, and was unable to give me any relief. The trouble grew worse, and I became convinced that I could not be cured. While in New York City, last week, I called on one of the most prominent physicians there, who charged me $25 for an examination and then recommended your "Regulator." Knowing you to be a regular Medical Association, and not a patent medicine scheme, I ordered the three bottles. I have not been troubled since I commenced taking it, but shall continue and take the entire three bottles so as to obtain a permanent cure. You have my sincere thanks. I am, gentlemen,

Cured of Rheumatism in Two Hours.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 2, 1882.

Dr. Rush's Medical Association:

Gentlemen—I have been troubled with rheumatism for two years. I tried all the best advertised oils and liniments, and many first-class physicians without relief. The last doctor I visited recommended "Dr. Rush's Blood Root Oil." I purchased a large bottle for fifty cents and applied it. In two hours I was relieved, and now am entirely well. Its effects are wonderful, and I believe it the only thing in the world which will cure rheumatism.

How Easy it is to Die.

"If I had strength to hold a pen, I would write how easy and delightful it is to die," were the last words of the celebrated surgeon, Wm. Hunter; and Louis XVI. is recorded as saying with his last breath, "I thought dying had been more difficult."

That the painlessness of death is owing to some benumbing influence acting on the sensory nerves may be inferred from the fact that untoward external surroundings rarely trouble the dying.

On the day that Lord Collingwood breathed his last, the Mediterranean was tumultuous; those elements which had been the scene of his past glories rose and fell in swelling undulations and seemed as if rocking him to sleep. Capt. Thomas ventured to ask if he was disturbed by the tossing of the ship. "No, Thomas," he answered, "I am now in a state that nothing can disturb me more—I am dying, and I am sure it must be a comfort to you and all that love me to see how comfortably I am coming to my end." In the Quarterly Review there is related an instance of a criminal who escaped death from hanging by the breaking of the rope. Henry IV. of France sent his physician to examine him, who reported that after a moment's suffering the man saw an appearance like fire, across which appeared a most beautiful avenue of trees. When a pardon was mentioned, the prisoner coolly replied that it was not worth asking for. Those who have been near death from drowning, and afterwards restored to consciousness, assert that the dying suffer but little pain.

Capt. Marryatt states that his sensations at one time when nearly drowned were rather pleasant than otherwise. "The first struggle for life once over, the water closing around me assumed the appearance of waving green fields. * * * It is not a feeling of pain, but seems like sinking down, overpowered by sleep, in the long, soft grass of the cool meadow."

Now this is precisely the condition presented in death from disease. Insensibility comes on, the mind loses consciousness of external objects, and death rapidly and and placedly ensues from asphyxia.

A Word of Advice.

It is as easy to be a good man as a poor one. Half the energy displayed in keeping ahead that is required to catch up when behind, would gain credit, give more time to attend to business, and add to the profit and reputation of those who work for gain. Be prompt; honor your engagements. If you promise to meet a man, or do a certain thing at a certain moment, be ready at the appointed time. If you go out on business, attend promptly to the matter on hand, then as promptly tend to your own business. Do not stop to tell stories during business hours. If you have a place of business, be there when wanted. No man can get rich by sitting around stores and saloons. Never "fool" on business matters. Have order, system regularity and promptness. Do not meddle with business you know nothing of. Never buy an article you do not need, simply because it is cheap, and the man who sells it will take it out in trade. Trade is money. Strive to avoid harsh words and personalities. Do not kick every stone in the path—more miles can be made in a day by going steadily on than by stopping to kick. Pay as you go; a man of honor respects his word as he does his bond. Aid, but never beg. Relieve others, when you can, but never give what you cannot afford to, simply because it is fashionable. Learn to say no. No necessity for snapping it out dog fashion, but say it firmly and respectfully. Have but few confidants. Use your brains rather than those of others. Learn to act, and think for yourselves. Be vigilant. Keep ahead rather than behind the time. Young men, cut this out and place it, by careful perusal in the golden store-house of your brain, and if you find that there is folly in the argument let us know.

ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER CURE WHERE OTHER PLASTERS FAIL. EVEN TO RELIEVE.

Take no other or you will be disappointed. Insist on having ALLCOCK'S.

Phila., 308 North Third St.,
February 1, 1883.

I have been using Allcock's Porous Plasters for a number of years and always with marked benefit. I have been much troubled with muscular rheumatism; have been treated by five of our best physicians without receiving any relief whatever. I then used Allcock's Plaster on the parts affected and I can assure you the pain has almost entirely left me. I can recommend them to every one as the best plaster made. I have tried other kinds but found them worthless.

The Bad and Worthless

are never imitated or counterfeited. This is especially true of a family medicine, and it is positive proof that the remedy imitated is of the highest value. As soon as it had been tested and proved by the whole world that Hop Bitters was the purest, best and most valuable family medicine on earth, many imitations sprung up and began to steal the notices in which the press and people of the country had expressed the merits of H. B., and in every way trying to induce suffering invalids to use their stuff instead, expecting to make money on the credit and good name of H. B. Many others started nostrums put up in similar style to H. B., with variously devised names in which the word "Hop" or "Hops" were used in a way to induce people to believe they were the same as Hop Bitters. All such pretended remedies or cures, no matter what their style or name is, and especially those with the word "Hop" or "Hops" in their name or in any way connected with them or their name, are imitations or counterfeits. Beware of them. Touch none of them. Use nothing but genuine Hop Bitters, with a bunch or cluster of green Hops on the white label. Trust nothing else. Druggists and dealers are warned against dealing in imitations or counterfeits.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

MICROSCOPIC MARVELS

How the Microscope is Producing a Revolution in the Practice of Dentistry

Chestnut in Lawson's Physiology.

Forty-eight microscopes were on the tables at the exhibition of Thursday evening at Lyceum hall, and a magnificent show they made. I will spare you a discussion of the various objects but will merely give the momentary impressions of a novice.

A section of human tooth stood, as large as a pie-plate, like a pillar of the Corinthian order, the intervening canals being filled and a little pus stood up on a tooth-like mass and disappeared in the clouds. This, the exhibitor said, was a hair.

The bacillus tuberculosis, the microbe that lurks in the lungs and causes consumption, was said to be 1-25,000 of an inch long. It looked like the air-cushion that Peter Cooper sits down on.

The Lord's prayer was exhibited photographed on a space smaller than a pin-head (1-200 of an inch). It looked about as large as a pie-plate.

The file of a cutpick looked like a saw-mill saw geared into a threshing-machine, and looked as if it would cut a log in two at a chip.

Prof. H. Hitchcock exhibited a fly within a trout's egg and formed ova. The latter, the ooze taken from a depth of two miles and a half in the South Atlantic ocean had somewhat the appearance of four-leafed clover; while the former arranged itself symmetrically, like pancakes or ginger-snaps waiting to be eaten.

Trichinæ in pork, resembled gold knot-holes in the side of a cedar barn; but the more aged specimens looked like those iron rings that are used for quoits, with holes to put your thumb through.

A bit of quartz crystal looked like an exhibition of fireworks on Staten Island—pettified pyrotechnics, as it were.

Dr. F. Y. Clark exhibited curious dentine—the micro-organisms in decayed human teeth. These minute fellows looked like ——. I'll tell you below what they looked like, for I sought out and inspected the interesting creatures the next day.

At the exhibition I saw our best-known dealer in microscopes, who is also a careful experimenter and a member of the society, and asked him if there was anything new in microscopy.

"New?" he repeated, "nothing absolutely new, perhaps, except the enormous progress that is being made in the science. Interest is extending among all classes of people, and we sell three times as many microscopes as we did five or six years ago. Great advancement is being made in these directions which affect human health—for instance, in dentistry. The microscope reveals the cause of the decayed teeth, and there are half a dozen of the pioneers of the movement in this country who will assure you that a real revolution is being effected. I might mention Dr. Miller, of Berlin, Prussia; Prof Mayr and Dr Stockwell, of Springfield, Mass.; Dr. Barrett, of Buffalo; or Dr. Clark, of this city. These men talk very earnestly and confidently concerning their success in preventing decay of the teeth. Clark was one of the first innovators here, but a good many who came to scoff remain to practice on his theory—the germ theory, as they call it.

The next day I hunted up Dr. Clark, and found him alone, and the microscope of high power, which had attracted my attention the previous night, on his table. In reply to my question he said: "Yes, but of all men we dentists need no stirring up. We are more alive to anything new than any others can be, and any new idea or mode of treatment, when once alluded to in our journals, stirs us up quite enough without the stimulus of the daily press. There are two theories as to the decay of teeth—the acid and the germ theory. I believe in and practise on the latter."

I inquired what facts the given theorists had discovered to justify their mode of practice. "We have advanced thus far," he said, "we have discovered bacteria of various species in carious dentine—that is, in decayed teeth. They are the smallest living organisms, but the microscope of high power reveals them. This much is a demonstration. But as this is a scientific controversy, I do not see the probableness of carrying it on in newspapers."

In response to further questions he said: "It has always been believed and taught in our schools, and colleges, and books that decay of the teeth was produced by acids. A great majority of dentists still practice on this belief. We believe this is entirely erroneous. We can not discover any acid in carious dentine, but we discover bacteria in all carious structures. These little things are found in abundance wherever decay is going on, and as they do not naturally belong there and are known to be agents of fermentation and decomposition, we hold they are the prime cause of the decay."

"In what way do bacteria attack teeth?"

"They get into the tubes, and, by absorbing the life-matter or bioplasm, the bony structure of the tooth becomes disintegrated, which is decay."

"Can you kill them?"

"Yes; without this ability our knowledge of their existence, appearance and function would be of little value. By the proper use of various antiseptics or disinfectors we claim to be able to destroy them and prevent their increase, and if our instructions are obeyed we ought to be able in most cases to prevent decay."

"Will this theory, when practically carried out, remove the necessity of extracting teeth?"

"This is the aim of all the wise and all good dentists, but we germ men believe that, knowing the actual cause of decay, we can more effectually and unerringly apply the remedy, and that the time will come when young people's teeth will be so cared for that all decay, as the Irishman would remark, will be arrested before it starts."

"Then what will become of the dentists?"

"By that time people may become fastidious about the arrangement and shape of their teeth, and that would keep an army of dentists busy. Or perhaps by that time," he continued, with a laugh, "folks will want their teeth painted black, like the Chinese mothers, or blue, like some of the Polynesians, and we shall all turn out decorative artists. How came you to call here?"

I told him, and asked the privilege of seeing some bacteria. He hesitated, and said he had talked too much already. In the interest of science I stepped to the microscope he had left and looked in. I saw a placid mill pond with a few stray bubbles on its surface. By straining my eyes for five minutes I discovered beneath the surface white specks, quite thick together. They might be little jelly-fish, I thought. Most of them were still, but now and then one gave a little shiver and moved on with a pitch.

"Are these bacteria?"

"Yes, there are a multitude of one or two species there."

"Can you see others?"

"Yes, in this slide you will be apt to find a variety. The other contained a bit of salva with carious dentine. This is the same, mixed with putrid water," and he substituted another slide.

I looked in, and gazing attentively, saw a rather complicated wilderness. "I see," said I, "a field as big as an Indian reservation. The Indians are off on the warpath. The field is about ten rods distant; I can see as much as fifty hogs rushing around in it; they are all white; each one whirls around and then dives ahead two or three steps—they are apparently dancing a schottische. I can see one reach for a bunch of grapes in a tree overhead, and another stick his snout under a log and try to get an acorn that it lies on. They have black spots on them—a sort of spotted Berkshire, I think."

"Those are infusoria," said the doctor; "about the smallest of animals."

"Ah! infusoria," said I, quoting from Chambers' Encyclopædia, which I had just read, "are very minute. It is estimated that a single drop of putrid water may contain more of those little fellows than there are human beings on the globe."

"Well, I don't know about that," said the doctor. "I rather doubt it. Perhaps they meant bacteria, which are much smaller. I don't wish to say exactly how small bacteria are, but it would certainly take a good many of them to fill a hogshead."

I took a mental note of the statistic and went on: "I see a turtle climbing up on to a ship. He stops to look closely down, and stands a moment some time on the shaft chain, going around in a leisurely manner along the white swing. The hogs are all excited, squealing, turning somersaults, butting into everything, but the mice are calm and serene. The mice may be the same (the fellows I saw before)."

"Yes, they are bacteria. I infer that the microscope showed that the bacteria, at any rate, have some large inside stockholder, struggling to get out. Infusoria are scavengers, able to eat anything, even the parts of a living body."

I took another look at the microscope. I saw a double cuticle rolling down across the lot, apparently either a peanut or a dumb bell. The mice were dancing their familiar jig, and there were bits of log chain scattered here and there over the field, and a good many of the mice were shivering as if they had fallen into the lowest part of the Kingsley flats. Other animals also bounded into the hold now and then. "This would be a better place for hunting than the Adirondacks," said I. And as my eyes ached, I thanked him, and came away.

YELLOWSTONE PARK.

The Monuments Upon the Great National Park.

Murat Halstead.

There is a public sensibility about the Yellowstone park that honors the people, and is gratifying, because it proves that they feel that the park is their property. Intense feeling has been aroused about the issues that have been granted to Uncle Rufus Hatch, and threats have been made that Uncle Rufus should suffer for his temerity, and General Brisbin, who has a fancy that he was foreordained to be the great and only admiral of Yellowstone lake, and who thinks that his sternwheel steamboat should paddle the golden waters and hear no sound save her own dashings, and witness no rival smoke from a competing chimney of galvanized iron in all her journeyings, has contributed to the public perplexity some literary efforts that need explanation.

I am enabled to contribute a fact or two to the Yellowstone controversy that may have general application. There is to be a rush of visitors to the national park this year. The Northern Pacific railroad runs fifty-six miles north of the northern boundary of the park, and a branch line will be built to the park itself as soon as possible. The Northern Pacific is finished to a point opposite the park, and the whole line will be completed by August 1.

Now, Uncle Rufus Hatch has leased a few ten-acre fields, to erect hotels for the accommodation of travelers. Without the leases there could not be hotels, without hotels the visitors would have to carry camp equipage, and that would give a monopoly (visiting to those prepared to expend large sums in providing a suitable outfit for their shelter and protection. Uncle Rufus means to keep a few good hotels.

The members of the Western associated press who are to visit Yellowstone park this summer, at such time as they may appoint, as guests of the Northern Pacific railroad, should not be severe beyond the dictates of conscience on an arrangement that will provide them with hotel accommodations, and all citizens should be grateful if, at the same time, provision is made for the protection of the wonders of nature in the park from those barbarians, whose peculiar degradation has already been illustrated by setting fire to venerable forests, hacking and mutilating picturesque objects, and spoiling the magnificent geysers with stones and logs. In comparison with the hideous product of recklessness and wantonness capable of such acts of destruction and desecration, the wild Indian, though called a savage, is to be esteemed a gentleman.

Pa and the Hot Maple Syrup.

Peck's Sun.

Last night we had hot maple syrup and biscuit for supper, and pa had a saucer full in front of him, just a steaming. I could see he was thinking too much about his mining stock, and I thought if there was anything I could do to take his mind off of it, and place it on something else, I would be doing a kindness that would be appreciated. I sat on the right of pa, and when he wasn't looking I pulled the table cloth so the saucer of real hot maple syrup dropped off in his lap. Well, you'd a died to see how quick his thoughts turned from his financial troubles to his physical misfortunes. There was about a pint of hot syrup, and it went all over his lap, and you know how hot melted maple sugar is, and how it sort of clings to anything. Pa jumped up and grabbed hold of his pants legs to pull them away from himself, and he danced around and told ma to turn the hose on him, and then he took a pitcher of ice water and poured it down his pants, and he said the condemned old table was getting so rickety that a saucer wouldn't stay on it, and I told pa if he would put some tar on his legs, the same kind that he told me to put on my lip to make my moustache grow, the syrup wouldn't burn so, and then he cuffed me, and I think he felt better. It is a great thing to get a man's mind off of his trouble, but where a man hasn't got any mind, like you, for instance—"

At this point the grocery man picked up a five pole, and the boy went out in a hurry and hung up a sign in front of the grocery, "Cash paid for fat Dogs."

Sarah Bernhardt's Bankruptcy.

A formidable struggle is going on among the creditors of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt for the possession of the 7,000 and odd dollars realized by the sale of her jewelry. M. Bloch, the diamond expert, appears to have a prior claim upon the money, as he advanced upon the jewelry a sum superior to the total amount realized. Mr. Worth and another dressmaker claim more than $2,000 for the costumes worn by Mme. Bernhardt at the Vaudeville theatre, while a host of other creditors demand various sums for "value received" in the shape of cash or goods. The affair is being examined by a court of law, and a decision will be arrived at next week.

Complicated Breach of Promise.

A Philadelphia case goes to prove that women, as well as men who live in glass houses, should not throw stones. Miss Susan Benisch of that town, sued William Craig for breach of promise, and got $7,000. Whereupon James Johnson came forward and sued Susan for breach of promise, showing that she was engaged to him at the time. It was proven that William jilted her. The court set aside the verdict against Craig, and Susan is forlorn.

Alcohol in the Hospitals.

New York Sun.

A return laid before the Melbourne hospital committee lately, being the result of non-alcoholic as opposed to alcoholic treatment, by various hospital surgeons (whose names in these reports are only represented by letters), is decidedly in favor of non-use of stimulants in sickness—the death rate being much heavier among those who had a generous allowance of them.

It was a Cold Day, and He Got Left.

A tramp looked at the jail at Malvern, Iowa, on a cold day. Smoke was coming from the chimney, and as he shivered in his ragged clothes, he longed for the comfortable warmth inside the building. As a means of getting in, he threw a brick through a church window. Bitter was his disappointment. The magistrate gave him fourteen days' labor on the streets.

A lady of experience observes that a good way to pick out a husband is to see how patiently the husband waits for dinner when it is behind time. Her husband remarks that a good way to pick out a wife is see whether the woman has dinner ready in time.

Need of Higher Culture in Home Life.

Nothing is more painful to one who knows what mothers may do for their children, or wives for their husbands, than to see the idleness of young women who are not compelled to work for a living, and to find how empty headed they are. This is only a small matter in itself, but the moment a woman is married she has to learn how to be interesting in her home to her husband, and as soon as she is a mother, the training of her children is the foremost duty of her life. In these two spheres of life, which are essentially the good of woman's existence, everything depends upon what the wife and mother brings to the several positions, everything for her own, her husband's and her children's happiness. Were it not perpetually losing their husbands' hearts, they rely upon transient personal charms to uphold affection, but the surest way to provide against the decay of the enthusiasm of the early married life is to cultivate those mental and moral qualities which make women always charming and attractive.

It is not easier to do this, aside from some high matters than the improvement of one's mind, the growth of literary tastes, the intellectual, what imports new and wise conversation into one's home. It may be the science, or French or German translation, or history or English literature, or biology, or music, but whatever it is, the habit of knowing one thing deeply, is worth immensely more than the knowledge itself, because it gives a taste for more and to enjoy more. These studies, even in themselves, are refining, but pursued in the general atmosphere of home, they are more than simply refining; they are agencies by which the spirit of the home is chastened, made moral, even made religious. Religion in one's home is the best when it is the least insisted upon, when its law is the simple, unobvious poetry of the household, when it seems to be the natural outgrowth of the amenities of life, and religion and culture go together in the well ordered life of every woman. But it is when the wife becomes a mother, when the religion and culture find a congenial sphere for development within the sanctities of home, when among children and among friends and neighbors the tone is always inspiring and inspiring, that literary culture and the genial development of a woman's mind and heart seem to make life sweetest and best. Fortunate is the boy or girl who has such a home. It is from such homes, be they the log cabin or the house with brown stone front, that men and women go forth with the idea that conquers the world. Every leading person has had a start somewhere, and usually it is traced to one of these mothers whose native or acquired culture has been imparted to her children. Here is the true import of all literature at home. It pays itself back hundreds of times over in its influence upon parents, and in the early direction it gives to their children.

The Passion for Diamonds.

"Are there more diamonds worn now than ever before in this country?"

"I should say so, most decidedly. I have been in the business over thirty years, and I never knew such a rage for the stone as exists to-day. Recently I attended a garden party at the Grand Union hotel at Saratoga and I saw bushels of them. This is the only way to describe the number of valuable diamonds worn there, and most of them were fine stones. Nearly every woman there had big solitaires in rings or ear-rings. You see the finest diamonds are worn solitaire in studs, rings and earrings, while for bracelets and hair-pins an inferior stone may be used, as they are not so conspicuous. I noticed one thing, however, at the Grand Union—nine-tenths of the diamonds were not clean. Dust settles on everything, and it is astonishing how little care a woman will give to her diamonds. They carefully inspect their gloves and shoes before completing their toilets, but their diamonds, worth often thousands of dollars, receive no attention, become dirty, and are sometimes lost. A lady customer of mine lost a very valuable diamond after possessing it years. If she had been in the habit of giving the gem any attention, she would have noticed that a setting of eighteen carat gold will wear out in time and lose its grip on the stone. The large solitaire diamond is now preferred to the cluster. Few diamonds are worn by gentlemen except in the case of young men anxious for display. Here and there a gentleman will wear solitaires on his shirt bosom, but if he has good taste he will be careful that they are small or he may be taken for a gambler. It is astonishing how much money is sometimes represented in the diamonds worn by ladies on a "swell" occasion. It is a common thing in New York society to see $10,000 or $20,000 in diamonds on a lady's person. Mrs. John Jacob Astor has been known to wear $50,000 worth of diamonds at an evening reception, and I should say that the diamonds worn by Mrs. W. H. Vanderbilt at the garden party I spoke of were easily that amount of money. Mrs. [illegible] Kay, wife of the "bonanza king," once offered to buy the famous "Regent" diamond, the most valuable in the world. It is valued at a mere million, but the French government wouldn't sell it."—New York Tribune.

She is Going to Try It.

A correspondent writes from way down East, in Lubec, Me. to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N.Y.: "I called on you about six weeks ago, sick with Bilious Disease. I bought a bottle of 'Favorite Remedy', and it cured me. What I want is some more of your medicine. My daughter is going to try it." Sensible men. He will not regret it, and when his daughter has tried it she will be satisfied too. "Favorite Remedy" is just the thing for the ills that afflict womankind.

How to be Beautiful.

To be beautiful we must cultivate the mind and develop the heart in the highest degree.

We must feed the mind by reading and meditation until the intellectual fire burns with a steady flame, irradiating the face with its pure brilliancy and suffusing the countenance with a calm and holy light; we must fill the brain with holy thoughts, and live, as it were, in an atmosphere of grand ideas which will lift us up above the belittling cares of earth.

We must cherish every kind impulse and generous disposition, making love the ruling passion of the heart, the ordering principle and inspiring motive of life. The more kindness the more beauty; the more love the more loveliness.

We must put a great organizing and ennobling purpose into the will, and concentrate our thoughts and affections upon the accomplishment of it, until enthusiasm wells up in the heart, suffusing the countenance and rebuilding the body on its own divine plan.

And this is the beauty that is abiding. Here physical good looks fade with the years, bleach out with sickness, and yield to the slow decay of mortality. But the beauty that has its origin in kind dispositions and noble purposes and great thoughts outlasts youth and maturity, and increases with age, and like the lucious peach that comes to us in autumn ripeness, covered with the delicate flush of purple and crimson, is never so beautiful as when waiting to be plucked by the gardener's hand, silently witnessing to the full, rich perfection time works out.

WOLCOTT, N. Y., Aug 20, 1882.
Gentlemen—I have been a great sufferer with rheumatism and constipation; have been almost helpless and unable to dress myself alone. I, like thousands of others, tried many remedies that I had seen largely advertised, in the hope that I might find some relief, but never until I had used the Rheumatic Syrup did I find anything that seemed to hit my case in the least, and when I did finally consent to use your remedy I had no faith at all in its merit, but I was very happily disappointed. To-day I am entirely free from pain, and can dress myself alone, and can get around better than I have for many years, and I have used the medicine less than four weeks, and can truthfully say that it will do all you claim for it.

I am yours truly,

NOTICE. I am requested by the Commander of the Village of Tecumseh to have printed the state law and the corporation law relative to sportsmen or others shooting on Sunday, make the corporation, and if such offenses are committed to enforce the law for the suppression of the same.

H. W. STEVENS,
Marshall.

Following is the law of State and Corporation.

[No. 106.]

AN ACT to prevent hunting for game with fire-arms, dogs, or otherwise on any enclosed lands or premises of another in this state without the consent of the owner or lessee of such lands or premises.

SECTION 1. The People of the State of Michigan enact, That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to hunt for game with fire-arms, dogs, or otherwise on any inclosed lands or premises of another in any county of this State without the consent of the owner or lessee of such lands or premises.

SEC. 2. Any person or persons violating the provisions of the foregoing section of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine not less than five nor more than twenty dollars, in the discretion of the court, and costs of prosecution. And in case the fine imposed and the costs of prosecution shall not be paid, the defendant shall be confined in the county jail of the county not less than five nor more than thirty days: Provided, however, That no complaint shall be made or entertained against any person for the violation of any of the provisions of this act unless the same shall be made by the owner or lessee of the land or premises so trespassed against.

Approved May 26, 1867.

CHAPTER VII.

SEC. 7. No person shall fire any gun, pistol or cannon within the business portion of said village, nor fire any gun, pistol or cannon across any streets anywhere in said village, nor fire any gun, pistol or cannon in any portion of said village calculated, or having a tendency to endanger, injure or put persons in fear, without the consent of the council, under a penalty not to exceed twenty dollars, in the discretion of the court; but nothing in this section contained shall be construed to prohibit any military company existing under provisions of law, from firing any gun or cannon when authorized by their commanding officer.

PLAY-WRITERS.

Extraordinary Profits in Successful Play-Writing.

Bartley Campbell is Successful But Not Happy.

Talking to a theatrical man to-day I picked up these items: current gossip. "Theatres on the road are doing well, and yet, said he, "a man writes a play, for instance, in the United States, and his charges are very small for handling it. Example: A literary man of very respectable standing in New York not long ago produced a play which received universal commendation and a crowd playwright who bears a reputation for literary work gave his personal promise to the composition upon that it should be thoroughly read, and promptly too. The writer was overjoyed, and carried his own piece to the theatre and saw it laid in the manager's hands. Months passed by, and no word was received. At the expiration of six months he sent for his piece, and it was not till one year had passed that he got it back, and then only after getting drunk and going to the theatre with a club and behaving in a most horizontal manner, falling through doors, box offices, screens and others things. If he had not really scared the house his manuscript might never have been returned. They sent it back with great thanks. When he came to look at it he found that some gum had been spilt over the leaves, which had been stuck together from the time he sent it, and this gum was clear proof the leaves had never been opened."

"Well," said I to my acquaintance, who is a pretty deep man in theatricals, "is that the glorious way managers conduct themselves?"

"There is one theatre in New York," said he, "which has employed a man and pays him a salary to read plays. That theatre, though it was started by persons new to theatricals, has made more money than any concern in New York. The money really lies in original pieces, but our managers are often dull, imitative men, who pay enormous royalties for the current stuff from London, and sometimes from Paris, putting no other value on their fellow citizens than a foreign seal. Here, for instance, is the "Silver King" running at Wallack's. It owes its entire strength to a few strong melodramatic situations. It has neither comedy nor character nor poetry. They have to pay for it well."

"How much do they pay?" said I.

"Well, it has been bought by a speculator who farms it out. I think he gets about 10 per cent of the gross receipts at every performance. The theater contains, perhaps, $1,500 seven times a week, on which the speculator will receive $700. Now, that sum of money would procure the writing by a respectable man in this country of a play."

"Are there many plays written by Americans?"

"Oh, yes; the production has been very large for some time past. The Madison Square theater has been paying good prices for plays, and has made money all the time, both in New York and on the road. Mrs. Burnett has concluded a contract for another play with them. Howard probably has made a contract for another one. They look ahead, and do not play the Bohemian like most of our managers, who seem to have neither bow nor helm, nor center board."

"What do you suppose a woman like Mrs. Burnett would get for her play?"

"I merely guess when I say that they pay her $1,000 on signing the agreement, give her $1,000 to each act as it is produced, and then pay her from 10 to 20 per cent of the gross receipts after the play begins. That is way to bring out the quality of anybody who has got it, to put them under the highest pressure of competition."

"How does Bartley Campbell do with his pieces?"

"Campbell is now worth about $50,000. He drinks champagne where he used to drink beer. I said to him the other day, seeing him before a bottle of yellow label. 'Hello! Have you already come to this?' 'Now,' said he, 'I am not half as happy as when I drank beer. My happiest days are over. There was a time when I could not pay my printing bills, take my company out of town without owing part of my board bill, and could not buy railroad tickets for them to the next point, but said to the conductor, 'Jim, you must let me slide on half the money and take the rest out in tickets.' Ah,' said Campbell, 'those were golden days. Now I can draw a check for my company and am no longer cahoots with the conductor, and drink champagne; but I am comparatively miserable. Success does not succeed.'"

"How does Campbell make his money?"

"Why, he hires his manager as well as his company. He procures a man acquainted with the profession to get him up a company to suit his price, and, therefore, need have nothing to say except to object to such a part being imperfectly represented. While he is not a man of strictly literary capacity, he is a man of very good dramatic capacity, and having lost money by writing over the heads of his audience, now writes toward the hearts and seldom misses it."

"Do you think that the New York theaters draw the money they ought to?"

"No. Their ignorance, laziness, prejudice and superstition keep from their doors thousands of people who would cultivate a native drama which would arouse the literary instinct. In France the best patrons of the play are people who either think they could write one or who regard the support of the original drama as a part of patriotism. The stage has become in France the indication of a nation's mental resources and love of country. In New York we play British pieces, French pieces and German pieces, and even the Italian drama is creeping in here; but a man writes pieces about his own country at his peril. The New York press, indeed, is a foreign press. It affects to treat matters from all sections of the United States like the London Times treats the operations of French men, Socialists and Nihilists. The tone of this press is given to it by a set of emigrants, who appear not liable to arouse the jealousy of its obscure native managers. We have a few play-writers whose pieces draw money on the other side of the water, but they are hardly noticed in the New York newspapers. Here are McKee Rankin's two plays, each of which has run in London a whole season, and you would find in London that they were by an American author, and his name exploited, but in New York you would have to go into some actor's chop house to inquire who wrote the pieces, and then you would hear that the actor did it himself—so great is conceit. Most of our actors, after they get a piece a few weeks, go around with a swagger and call the author a great villain. 'I got the piece from him,' says Strutt, 'and it wasn't worth a damn. I built it up—it's mine.' In short, the New York stage to-day has some of the most provincial attributes on the earth. They will buy failures from London, and have lawsuits over failures from Paris, because they really do not know anything about theatrical work. Lester Wallack said but yesterday that he knew nothing about plays; that unexpected successes were made in his house by things he had never admired."

Economical Explorer.

Joe Murphy, being accused on one occasion of stinginess in connection with a charitable object, replied: "Other gentlemen puts down on the list what they thinks proper, and so does I. Charity is a private concern, and what I gives is nothing to nobody." And Joe is about right, too.

Who Would Have Dreamed It?

Every Day Thoughts.

It is the sunlight from the human heart or from the world that renders our lives happy? What suffices wealth, ease and daily intercourse with friends if we are dissatisfied and discontented? Can we glean peace from anger, or joy from bitterness of spirit?

God sends us ten thousand joys, but we will not stretch out our hands to grasp them; and yet we grieve that our days are so inharmonious, our hearts are continually going in and out, as it were, of eclipses. Yesterday jostles to-day and to-morrow carries them both away captive. Our mornings are spent in anticipating the afternoons, and our afternoons are spent in regretting our mornings. May God make us wise, that we may learn what we need to advance our happiness and the happiness of those around us. We all in a sense depend upon each other for our happiness. Tenderness and attention to the outbreak of a pained heart will clear our way more fully, and the feeling of wrong, desperation and disquietude would be abated. Nothing draws us so fully and tenderly toward a person as their inquiries after our welfare and our enjoyments. To know that our happiness is studied by some unselfish creature brings exquisite pleasure—if we are not deformed by an ungrateful selfishness.

This is not a mere subject to dream and write about; as our actions here fix the nature of our enjoyment hereafter.

It is the sunlight from the human heart that renders true happiness—it is kind words and pleasant deeds that make the world bright and glorious.

From the open portals of Heaven come charity, love and faith; with these in our hearts we can diffuse kind words and do noble deeds, and from them glean pure happiness.

Rheumatine!

An Internal Remedy and a Sure Cure for all kinds of Rheumatic Complaints!

If You are suffering from

Kidney Complaints

Give Rheumatine a fair trial. You will never regret having done so.

From Mr. F. Moshell, Passenger Conductor on the New York and Hudson River R'y.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1883.

Mr. Dear Mr. Sutherland.—My wife having suffered greatly from rheumatism, she was induced to try your Rheumatine. After taking only two bottles she was completely cured of rheumatism, and her general health greatly improved.

I also took three bottles of Rheumatine with the result that I now find my Rheumatism entirely gone, and a very marked improvement in my general health. I consider Rheumatine a first-class remedy for rheumatism and all affections of the kidneys. I am, yours truly,

FRED MOSHELL.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

Mr. Frank Butler has returned to his home in Pennsylvania, owing to the severe illness of his father.

Mrs. Lex Kirkpatrick is home at her father's on a visit.

Frank Rogers is home from Lansing where he has been attending college, being out of health.

Al. Hoxie has gone to Auburn, N.Y., in the interests of Hoxie & Son.

F. H. Holdridge, who has been spending the winter in Kansas, returned last week, and thinks Michigan the best place yet.

C. W. Arner, of Toledo, spent last Sunday with his relatives near Holloway.

Ben. Kelley has began work on his house.

A new line of business at Holloway. A cobbler.

Our meat market is in full blast.

W. E. Doty had the misfortune to lose a valuable breeding mare last Saturday.

Mrs. M. Spencer is somewhat improved.

RIDGEWAY RUMBLINGS.

Was Monday and Tuesday what is sometimes called squaw winter?

Quarterly meeting last Sunday. Rev. Mr. McElwain, of Clinton, officiated.

Uncle Tommy Lupton surprised many of his friends by his presence at church last Sunday morning. He has been in feeble health for a long time, and now is in his seventy-sixth year.

John Larkin now has a green house in the rear of his dwelling. There is a prospect for orange blossoms, may be. Those two new grape arbors so near alike must mean something.

Samuel Fletcher has been laid up for a few days by a kick from his horse that made a wound in his right leg below the knee which required thirteen stitches to sew up.

S. P. Smith has a new kitchen. Dr. Nelson has his addition nearly done, and Wm. Ransom has a new barn in place of the one recently burned.

An ice cream social will be held at the residence of Wm. R. Wilson next Friday evening. It is hoped it will taste better than it would last Monday and Tuesday.

Perhaps one-third of the corn was planted before the late cold storm. It is generally the opinion that the most of it will have to be replanted.

Montie Pocklington has had his money bank stolen, containing two dollars and a quarter.

Moral.—What farmers get for hiring tramps. W. F. POCKLINGTON.

The above note was received by your correspondent in a lady's handwriting just before our last letter was fixed, and he supposed it was all right, coming as it did through a member of Mr. Pocklington's family. The reference made to it however called forth the indignation of a certain young gentleman who is neither a tramp or guilty of taking anybody's money bank, and he desires us to straighten the matter for him.

Noticing that in some of the public schools of the State the pamphlet entitled "Michigan and its Resources" is being used as a text book, the Adrian Times remarks: "This is a good departure from the old routine. There must be some fault somewhere in a system of education that turns the child out after years of study as ignorant of his own country or state, as of countries on the other side of the globe. The pamphlet in question was prepared for use in Europe, to give people there intending to emigrate information that would induce them to come to Michigan. It contains a fund of most valuable facts that every school boy and girl ought to be familiar with. How many men in this state are prepared to answer intelligently and correctly the questions that people whom they meet in other states, or in other countries, are sure to ask about the state, particularly if thinking of selecting a home? Not very many. There is no place where such information could be acquired so easily as in the school room, and while the child is learning about articulation, inflection and accent he would also be learning about the extent, character and advantages of his state as a place for men and women to live."

An attempt was made on the evening of the 7th inst. to assassinate the editor of the Schoolcraft County Pioneer, at Manistique. The pistol ball struck under his hand as he sat writing at his office table, about 10 p. m., and glanced upward into the ceiling. He pursued his supposed assailants and fired at them twice in the darkness, but they have not been discovered. He cannot account for the attempt.

The Inter Ocean of May 17th editorially says:

It has often been remarked that the Inter Ocean finds friends everywhere in suburban cities and in the country press. One reason for this is that it has never adopted the policy to pull anybody down for a stepping-stone to power and influence. It has honestly asked every subscriber to consider his first duty to his home paper, and make that as good as possible, and then the Inter Ocean has asked a consideration upon its merits. It is in the power of the intelligent people to make every home paper, when wisely established, good by proper patronage and encouragement. No man who owns a house or a farm, or who claims a residence in any locality, but is peculiarly benefitted by having a well conducted home paper, giving all the local news. It is entirely safe to say no man gets so much of real value for the same amount of money as he gets in his paper, costing less than the price of a single cigar or a mug of beer.

MICHIGAN STATE ITEMS.

Forty houses have been built in Cadillac this spring.

A railroad from Stanton to St. Louis is being agitated.

A few days ago lightning killed 19 sheep for Charles Wiltz, of Carlotte.

Owosso episcopal church calls Rev. W. C. Sherman, of Cannon Falls, Minn.

The mineral bath house at Midland has been extensively repaired, and is again open to the public.

The state homeopathic society closed its annual meeting at Lansing last week, electing as officers: President, R. B. House, of Tecumseh; vice presidents, Phil. Porter, of Detroit, and A. A. Allen, of Ann Arbor; secretary, J. G. Gilchrist, of Detroit; treasurer, G. A. Robertson, of Battle Creek.

The Grand Rapids Times says something of a sensation in school circles has been caused recently by the rumor that Bishop Richter has issued a general order to the effect that the children of all catholic families shall be withdrawn from the public schools and sent to the catholic schools exclusively.

Last week Mrs. Thomas Wildsmith, of Kalamazoo, missed her little four-years-old Bertie, and among other places went to the cistern in search of him. Looking in she could see nothing, but a strange impulse bade her search it with the pole used in drawing water. She did so, and in a moment brought the apparently dead body of her darling boy to the surface whence, with rare presence of mind, she drew him to her arms. Medical aid finally succeeded in restoring the child to consciousnes

MY UNCLE'S STORY; OR HOW TO CONQUER PREJUDICE.

BY QUIZ, BRONSON, MICH.

"I will give you," said my uncle, as we were leisurely riding along in our carriage one day, "an infallible recipe for conquering prejudice."

Having felt and observed much of the evil attendant upon this state of mental progress, [illegible] as a remedy [illegible] prohibited from [illegible] who sat by my side.

Being assured that he would [illegible] the degree a child's [illegible] proceeded as follows:

[illegible]

[illegible] Pennsylvania [illegible] after by some [illegible] people with an uncouth race whose manners were the antipodes of society, which I had heard my father speak about from the [illegible].

My views of this people having received this unfavorable turn, I was prepared to [illegible] everything of a disparaging nature which might be said or written about them, and my first impression was by no means [illegible] confirmed by subsequent contact with people from the state whose very [illegible] had [illegible] me [illegible] found.

Two men, who were traveling from Pittsburg to Cleveland put up at my father's house one night. This was before the days of rail roads, and they drove a team of four horses [illegible] to one of those [illegible] wagons which to the dwellers in the Western reserve a generation ago were no unusual sight. These men were rough, uncouth specimens of humanity, dirty looking and profane. One of them used some of his profanity in hearing of my father, and was kindly reprimanded therefor, which was meant as a rebuke was very ungracefully received and sneeringly commented upon in my hearing but behind my father's back.

The conduct of these men from Pennsylvania only confirmed my dislike for the class to which they belonged and which, as I supposed, included the entire population of that state.

I have noted, continued my uncle, that a prejudice once conceived is very much like a snowball rolling down a mountain side increasing in bulk and momentum as it advances. So it was with me. My dislike for those people continued and increased until finally it became chronic. Every additional meeting with these men only deepened and strengthened the impression first made on the play ground. Only uncouth specimens presented themselves, and I judged all the rest by these. First impressions, though false, are liable to be most lasting. So I found it to be here. Even after I had grown to manhood Pennimite was a distasteful word and the home of this class of men a region of shadows. But while this convictions had been growing upon me, my mind had been gradually enlarging and my stock of knowledge increasing, and the time had now fully come when I must make choice of some employment for a life work. A revival wave had swept over the community where I had been brought up, and I, along with others had, as I trusted, become a willing subject of the Kingdom. My eyes were now opened to see the world's needs. My heart was, I thought, in full sympathy with my misguided fellow men. My whole soul yearned over erring mortals, and I longed to be doing something for their rescue. But I was sorely perplexed about my field of labor. Where should it be? While I was revolving this question in my mind, and praying God to open for me a door and prepare a way for my feet, a call, clear as a bugle note came from out of the darkness of the coal regions. "Come over and help us." Could the call be divine? Was it possible? My whole soul revolted at the thought of laboring in such a place and among such a people. But I was soon convinced that the call came from Him who has a perfect right to command and I might stand and argue with infinite wisdom on a question of duty; so my mind was soon made up. Go I must. So having provided myself with a trusty horse, a saddle and a port manteau, the journey was commenced. I soon found myself in my new field of labor, but everything looked so dark and forbidding that I inwardly resolved to avail myself of the first decent excuse that presented itself to quit my field and cast my lot with a people whose tastes were more congenial with my own.

Through repeated opportunity I was finally induced to enter into an engagement with the people for the ensuing period of six months. Only [illegible] experience of about such [illegible] people, whom other Christians, but I soon had to be more [illegible] [illegible] with equal [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

A NEW TREATMENT.

For Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic and Nervous Disorders.

A CARD.

We the undersigned, having received great and permanent benefit from the use of "COMPOUND OXYGEN," prepared and administered by Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, of Philadelphia, and being satisfied that it is a new discovery in medical science, and all that is claimed for it, consider it a duty which we owe to the many thousands who are suffering from chronic and so-called "incurable" diseases to do all that we can to make its virtues known, and to inspire the public with confidence.

We have personal knowledge of Drs. Starkey & Palen. They are educated, intelligent and conscientious physicians, who will not, we are sure, make any statement which they do not know or believe to be true, nor publish any testimonials or reports of cases which are not genuine.

Rhymes of Animals.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette writes: "I strung the following rhymes to tickle the ears of my little boys, four and six years old. They cause their mamma to read it over and over again, and then fetch the big illustrated dictionary to have her point out the funny animals with such strange names, and tell what she can about them. This fancy for rhyme and rythm is, I suppose, a characteristic of nearly all children, and perhaps the publication of this will amuse a wider circle than my little household. The aim has been, after euphony, to have the most incongruous animals in juxtaposition:

Alligator, Beetle, Porcupine Whale,
Bobolink, Panther, Dragon-fly, Snail
Crocodile, Monkey, Buffalo, Hare,
Dromedary, Leopard, Mud-turtle, Bear,
Elephant, Badger, Pelican, Ox,
Flying-fish, Reindeer, Anaconda, Fox,

What the Minister Says.

Homer, Ill.

Mr. A. Kiefer—My Dear Sir:—I have been afflicted for the last four years with derangement of the Liver, causing Dyspepsia, Headache, Nausea, and general derangement of the whole system. I have tried a great many preparations, but found no relief until I tried one bottle of your Taraxine, which has permanently cured me. I also found it to be good for the Ague. I commend it to all who suffer with derangement of the liver. Very truly yours, Rev. Thomas Whitlock.

For sale by all druggists.

One of the chief causes of failure in growing house-plants is the overheated rooms in which they are placed. We often see plants in broken pitchers and old fruit-cans, growing in some dirty window of a poor man's cottage, far more luxuriant and healthy than those in the heated houses of the rich, because during most of the winter, plants in their natural state make little if any growth, the most they need being protection from frost. The cool rooms of the poor, ill-ventilated though they may be, furnish more fresh air than can survive the furnace-heat and the unconsumed gases of a house "with all the modern improvements."

The New Discovery.

Dr. Deming's Pile Ointment, the discovery of a physician of wide reputation, who has achieved the greatest success, the most conspicuous distinction, and the highest honors in his profession, is a sure cure for blind, bleeding, itching and ulcerated piles. A single box has frequently been known to cure the most obstinate case, and thousands who have used this great remedy attest its efficacy.—For sale by all druggists.

Henry Ward Beecher, in a sermon on "A Day of Rest," said: "Sunday ought to be the pleasantest day of the week to the children. It wasn't to me. I was lively and mercurial, laughing at everything. I went to church and heard a sermon I did not understand, was waked up with a snap on the head when I went to sleep, and when I got home I was set down to learn the catechism. My heart sank within me, for I never could memorize sentences, and without it I could have no dinner. I have given many hard knocks at Calvinism and catechism since, and the origin of them all was the deprivation of those Sunday dinners."

We All Believe

That it is a long lane that has no turning; that many a shaft at random sent, finds a mark the archer little meant; that no remedy sold will cure coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough and all throat and lung troubles so quickly nor permanently as Dr. Bigelow's Positive cure; that our druggists, Baker and Hall, are very generous to give trial bottles of this remedy free of charge.

Noting the Effects.

R. Gibbs, of Buffalo, N. Y., writes: "Hearing your Burdock Blood Bitters favorably spoken of, I was induced to watch their effects, and find that in chronic diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, your bitters have been signally marked with success. I have used them myself with best results, for torpidity of the liver; and in the case of a friend of mine suffering from dropsy the effect was marvelous." Price $1.

THE NEW PATENT

DUST-PROOF

Stem Winding Open Face Case,

MANUFACTURED BY THE AMERICAN WATCH CO., WALTHAM, MASS.

This case is formed in one solid piece without joint or seam, opening in front only, thus avoiding the usual cap, and securing greater strength and durability.

These watches are all open face. The bezel, into which an extra strong crystal is fitted with an especially prepared water-proof cement, is attached to the case by screwing it thereon, and thus forms an air-tight junction with the body of the case, which is proof against dust and moisture.

To railroad men, travelers, miners, lumbermen and others who are almost constantly exposed and who have to make frequent reference to the watch, these qualities are of the utmost importance.

The following letters tell their own story.

VALDOSTA, Georgia, July 20, 1882.

"I sold one of your Patent Dust-Proof Cases about ten months ago, and the other day it came back to me with the request to make it wind easier. On examination I found that the stem was rusty, and I inquired into the cause of it. The gentleman stated to me that he was starting some saw-logs that had lodged in the bend of the river, when his chain caught in a bush and threw his watch into about twelve feet of water, and he was about two hours finding it. When he got it out it was running and he thought all right. In about three months he found that the stem was hard to turn and sent it to me.

I can say that the watch is all that the company claims for it and recommend it to all railroad and mill men.

B. W. BENTLEY."

CLINTON, Iowa, April 29, 1881.

"I wish you would send me a spring for the Wm. Ellery Watch * * * By the way this Ellery is a watch I sold in your Screw Bezel Case to a farmer last fall. The first of January he lost the watch in the woods, and found it this week in about one foot of water. It had lain three months and over in snow and water, with but slight injury to the watch—only a hair-spring.

C. S. RAYMOND."

The above were very severe tests, and demonstrate beyond doubt, that for any reasonable length of time during which a watch might be under water it would receive no injury whatever.

We make these cases in both gold and silver, and as a Perfectly Dust-Proof Stem Winding Watch Case, Challenge the World to Produce its Equal.

Training Horses.

A horse cannot be screamed at and cursed without becoming less valuable in every particular. To reach the highest degree of value the animal should be perfectly gentle and always reliable, but if it expects every moment to be "jawed" at and struck, it will be in a constant state of nervousness, and in its excitement is as liable through fear to do something which is not expected as to go along doing what you started it to do. It is possible to train a horse to be governed by the word of mouth almost as completely as it is to train a child, and in such training the horse reaches its highest value. When a horse is soothed by the gentle words of his driver—and we have seen him calmed down from great excitement by no other means—it may be fairly concluded that he is a valuable animal for practical purposes, and it may be certainly concluded that the man who has such control over him is a humane man and a sensible one. But all this simply means that the man must secure the animal's confidence. Only in exceptional instances is a horse stubborn or vicious. If he understands his surroundings and what is expected of him, he gives no trouble. As almost every reader must know, if the animal when frightened can be brought up to the object, he will become calm. The reason is that he understands there is nothing to fear. So he must be taught to have confidence in the man who handles him, and then this powerful animal, which usually a man could not handle if it were disposed to be vicious, will give no trouble. The very best rule, therefore, which we would lay down for the management of the horse is gentleness and good sense on the part of the driver. Bad drivers make bad horses.

Catarrh causes throat and lung difficulties. The positive remedy for catarrh, hay fever, and cold in head is Ely's Cream Balm. Price 50c.

Apply into nostrils with little finger.

For three winters I have been afflicted with catarrh, and cold in the head. Last winter I used Ely's Cream Balm, and it accomplished all that was represented. T. F. McCormick, Judge Common Pleas, Elizabeth N.J., Aug. 25, 1880.

Ely's Cream Balm, an unusually meritorious article, is recognized as such by our customers. The only catarrh cure that has proved to be what was claimed for it. I recommend its use to my friends and customers as a cure for catarrh, hay fever, cold in the head, &c. E. R. Wilson, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Chewing-Gum.

We have it upon common report that chewing gum is a substance well known to the youthful part of the community. The qualities which it possesses at the time it comes from the confectioner are all familiar to the youngest of us. One easily comprehends the main ingredients of candy; but who, without being told, would suspect that chewing gum is often only a refined product of petroleum? The time was when the fragrant spruce furnished the most common material for the purpose. But this is no longer the case. The reader, familiar with the processes of refining coal oil, is aware that the thick, brown liquid which comes from the earth, at one stage of its manufacture, is strained through heavy linen cloths. The residuum left after this operation is a dirty, brownish-yellow wax that smells abominably. That unpromising substance, melted, bleached, deodorized and prepared for commerce, appears in masses that weigh about one hundred pounds, resembling oblong blocks of clouded ice. It has no odor and no taste, except what belongs to any wax in its purest state. It may be used for many purposes that it is not necessary to describe now. The manufacturer of chewing-gum purchases these blocks ready made to his hand, and at once melts them down. To two hundred pounds of wax he adds about thirty pounds of sugar, and gives the mixture a flavor by the use of some essential oil, such as lemon or vanilla, and perhaps adds some coloring matter. The melted mass is poured out upon a clean marble slab, and cut in the various shapes known to masticators.

An Undoubted Blessing.

About thirty years ago, a prominent Physician by the name of Dr. William Hall discovered, or produced after long experimental research, a remedy for diseases of the throat, chest and lungs, which was of such wonderful efficacy that it soon gained a wide reputation in this country. THE WORLD RENOWNED

WALTER A. WOOD

NEW IMPROVED BINDER.

M. E. Conklin, Agent.

TECUMSEH, MICH.

1883. FOR THE SEASON OF 1883.

There has been already sold 439,554 of these Machines.

This record, more than anything we can assert or claim for the merits of the WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES, should commend them to the favor of the Farmer.

The evidence of the success of our machines, and of their unrivalled superiority in merit and public favor, does not rest upon any bare assertion of ours, but upon facts; and these facts are uncontrovertible. We have always maintained, and do still maintain, that the best possible test of merit in Harvesting Machines is their long-continued success in practical use, and upon this standard we have ever been and still are content to rest our claims to public favor.

It is a well attested fact by all who use them, that the Wood Machines require far less repair than any other machine in use. No other Binder or Mower is as durable and free from breakages.

The Wood Twine Binder as now made retains those meritorious features which have rendered it UNAPPROACHABLE BY RIVALS in the past, and which are already familiar to the farming public, and also contains such RADICAL IMPROVEMENTS as will certainly place it ANOTHER LONG STEP IN ADVANCE of all competition. In the family war of the different machine manufacturers the Wood has come off victorious and remains master of the field.

The manufacturers have followed up the new binder, during the progress of the harvest of 1882, through grain fields without number, from one end of the United States to the other, from Texas to Dakota, from Virginia to Vermont, and even as far north as Prince Edward Island in the British Dominions—where the latest growing grain crops are to be found—and the results of this close and protracted inspection have fully warranted the representations made, strong though they be.

There has been various improvements of importance in the details of both the Harvester and Binder for 1883. All we ask is for the farmers of this vicinity to examine the Walter A. Wood Machines before placing their order, and we have no fear as to the result, as it is conceded by all that it is the most perfect machine in all its details, manufactured.

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAY 24, 1883.

Beautiful snow on the 23d of May. Where is Wiggins now?

The big Brooklyn bridge will be formally opened to the public to day.

The wind and the water seem to be having a race for the mastery out west.

Politics are beginning to warm up in Ohio as the time approaches for the two state conventions.

The star route trial is drawing to a close. Some of the jurymen have grown gray-headed since it began.

The cable informs us that a diabolical attempt was made yesterday to blow up the wash stand in the Czar's bed room.

Bob Ingersoll has commenced his plea in the star route trial. He will probably reach the peroration by the Fourth of July.

A convention of watermelon growers was recently held down in Georgia. Such a meeting might be aptly called "congregated colic."

The Michigan Manual for 1883 is at hand. It contains a large amount of valuable statistics, and will be a very handy volume for reference.

The Czar is in trouble again. As the day for his coronation approaches he has discovered a conspiracy in his own body guard to take his life.

It is said that Gen. Butler can go to sleep at once whenever he chooses.—This is accounted for by the fact that he served on the night police force in his younger days.

Economical boys are now saving up their pennies to go and see Jumbo. It will be a good time to tap the missionary boxes which have caught the stray pennies to educate the heathen.

One Mrs. Jones of Kalamazoo, has started on a walking trip to San Francisco. She carries a big hickory cane and will deliver a lecture at convenient points on the route upon the "Modesty of American Women."

There is likely to be some fun at the big bridge opening in Brooklyn today. Eleven thousand tickets have been issued for the Academy of Music ceremonies and the hall itself will accommodate two thousand people by crowding.

A woman lawyer in Milwaukee got into difficulty with a judge before whom she was trying a law suit and threw a glass of water in his face.—She was sent to jail for contempt of court as freely as a man lawyer would have been.

The approaching commencements will shell out a big crop of young lawyers and doctors. While the supply of doctors and lawyers is increasing beyond any proper demand, scores of churches are becoming rusty and dusty from misuse and crying in vain for ministers. A share of the young legal and medical sprigs should turn their attention to theology.

There was a hot fight over the election of President of the Army of the Potomac at its last reunion. The Grant faction ran the "silent man" himself, while the McClellan faction ran Gen. John Newton, and Grant was left out in the cold. The esteem felt for "Little Mac" by his old comrades in arms seems to increase rather than diminish as the years roll round.

The state public school at Coldwater costs the people from $110 to $120 per year for each inmate, while the Adrian Reform School costs about $400 per inmate. The extravagance of the latter institution produced a sharp discussion in the legislature when the subject of an appropriation came up, but the sum called for was finally voted.

The Cincinnati Enquirer is responsible for this thrilling account of a pet dog funeral:

A Washington lady whose home was however in Ohio, set the fashion for that city in regard to the death of pet dogs. The suit was of broadcloth, the necktie was white, the coffin was of rosewood and the trimmings were silver-plated. The pet was buried near his western home, and the lady put on deep mourning. Although he was from Ohio, he never sought or held office.

Several of the pictorial features of the June Century are of uncommon interest, like the frontispiece portrait of Tennyson after Woolner's bust, and the other full-page pictures in this profusely illustrated number. Most readers will probably turn with a lively interest to the three or four papers by authoritative writers on subjects which now lead in the current of public discussion. The Century is truly one of the leading magazines of the day.

An exchange says: If people would purchase green coffee and brown it in their homes there would be fewer cases of diphtheria, scarlet and typhoid fever. The aroma arising from the browning berry is one of the best agents to disinfecting dwellings of impure air. It is easier to buy coffee already browned than to prepare it, but the preparation once a week saves health and doctor bills. The doors should be left open and let the aroma pervade every room.

The Popular Science Monthly for June opens with a timely article on "Medical Quacks and Quackeries," by Dr. F. J. Shepherd, whose views concerning the origin of quacks, and the conditions which enables them to flourish, with accounts of a few of the more famous historical specimens, will be found lively and instructive reading. The June number of this valuable magazine is full of excellent articles. Published by D. Appleton & Co., N. Y. Fifty cents per number $5 per year.

St. Nicholas for June is now upon our table and is always a welcome visitor, being well filled with instructive and entertaining reading. The present number is crowded with pictures, and appropriately ushers in the summer with an interesting article, by I. N. Ford, on the Tribune "Fresh-air Fund, through which so many thousands of poor city children have been enabled to taste the pleasures of a two weeks' vacation in the country. Humor and pathos are delightfully blended throughout the whole number.

PROSPERITY AND PROTECTION.

The Jackson Patriot indulges in these sensible sentiments.

When protectionists talk about the great prosperity that high taxation brings they should be reminded that the most general, lasting, severe and deep-seated distress from which this country ever suffered—when thousands upon thousands of laborers could not get work and became tramps—prevailed from 1873 to 1879, under the highest protective tariff ever enacted. During this high tariff distress no business interests were more deeply involved, and had more trouble to recover from its effects, than the manufacturers that enjoyed the greatest protection, of which class the iron industry was a notable example. The panic of 1873 demonstrated that high taxation does not insure prosperity.

TAX THE TELEGRAPH.

The Adrian Times, speaking about the taxation of the telegraph monopoly says:

In Wilmington, Deleware, the telegraph company is compelled to pay the city a tax of one dollar for each of its poles set within the city limits. There is no justice in such a requirement as that. Take it in cities and towns where, for instance, the telegraph company owns no building, it sets its poles along the most frequented streets, forming obstructions that are unsightly and oftentimes serious impediments, particularly in cases of fire. Why a company that asks and receives so much in the way of accommodations, and is better able to bear its portion of the local taxes than many individuals and interests that are taxed, should get its accommodations and protection without paying for them as others do, nobody can tell. The telegraph monopoly in this country has become so powerful that its prices for service are in no sense regulated as are prices among corresponding interests, for it occupies the whole field and permits no competition. It puts its prices as high as it thinks the business interests of the country will stand without rebelling. To say that such a monopoly as that is wronged by taxation is nonsense, the people are wronged wherever and whenever it is not compelled to pay its just part of the burden of taxation.

CHECKING PROSPERITY:

Speaking of the deleterious effect of a protective tariff upon the prosperity of Canada the London Weekly Advertiser says:

"In the United States the extent of their population, the diversity of soil and climate reduces the evils of protection to a minimum. Here our want of compactness, our isolation from each other, and our similarity of circumstances and pursuits aggravates the evils of the system, which demagogues have initiated, and which short sighted, timid men uphold. The Province of Ontario has suffered perhaps beyond any other by the immense drain upon her population, and upon her wealth. In some parts of the country there has been a perceptible diminution of the population, and a marked depreciation in the value of real estate. Previously to 1878 the annual gain in population was about 40,000 a year. In 1880 there was a decrease of nearly 10,000, and last year there was an increase of but 2,000. This is the condition of things brought about mainly by the folly of excessive taxation. That system which was to have built up towns and cities, and turned farms into gardens, has driven from some of our northern villages half their population, depreciated the value of real estate, has diminished rents, and seriously checked the growth of the population."

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, May 18th.

I think it would have required a very extraordinary inducement to have made me sail for Europe on the Williams & Guion line's steamer Alaska last Tuesday. She and her sister ship the Arizona are known as the greyhounds of the ocean, and the speed with which they travel is marvelous. It is of course needless to say that they are the crack vessels of the transatlantic fleet, and the wealthy which used to fight its way to the ticket office of the Cunard line to secure berths in one of their steamers, now would travel by no other vessel than either of these. Well, long before last Tuesday every berth on the Alaska had been engaged. Three or four days before the date of her sailing a party of gentlemen who were determined to sail by her. The captain and five of the officers let them have their staterooms for a heavy consideration of course. Then, on Sunday night a party of Englishmen came from the West. They had travelled post haste in order to get back to England in time to see the Derby run. This great race comes off next Wednesday. It was impossible to give them cabin accommodations so they went to the steerage, making arrangements at the same time to eat in the saloon. Now if that vessel is to make port in time to enable her passengers to get to the Epsom downs in time for the race, you may imagine at what rate of speed she must travel, something of the style in which the hero of Jules Vernes "Around the World in Eighty Days" went. This may be exciting, but to the average man a little less haste would be much more comfortable.

The fate of Commodore Fish's magnificent new schooner Yacht Grayling will be apt to confirm the belief of the average "sailor man" in omens, if it needs confirmation at all. When she was launched the Commodore's little daughter Julia was selected to break the traditionary bottle of champagne on her bow, and to pronounce the formula: "I name thee Grayling." The little thing, supported by her father, tried three times to break the bottle but in vain. Finally with main might she succeeded in smashing it, but it was done so awkwardly that her dress got more of the "fizz" than the schooner's side. "That's bad, very bad," remarked an old tar, and the rest of the forcastle took up the ancient mariner's rhyme and answered in chorus "very bad." Last Sunday the Commodore took her out for her trial trip, and the owner of the famous Montauk took out his schooner to enable Mr. Fish to test his boats speed. It soon became evident that the Montauk had the foot of the Grayling, and this nettled Mr. Fish. Sending his sailing master below he took the wheel himself. Awkward flaws of wind were coming up and the Montauk got ready for them. Not so with the Commodore. He kept right on, straining every nerve to get ahead.—Suddenly there came a squall, and before the crew and the company on board had time to catch their breath the vessel lay on her beam ends. The Montauk's people promptly came to the rescue, and thus no lives were lost. Otherwise the fate of those on board would have been as sad as that on the unfortunate Mohawk some years ago. The yacht finally sunk, and although she was secured and her place marked, she was twice run into by passing vessels. One of them carried off her boom, and the other broke off her mainmast. Yesterday they succeeded in raising her, and she is now being thoroughly overhauled at Poillon's ship yard. Her beautiful interior which was composed of a most artistic blending of imported woods, brass plate, plate glass, bronzes, bric-a-brac, etc., is utterly ruined.—Her hull is perfectly sound, but despite night and day work she will hardly be got ready for the opening sail of the Atlantic Yacht Club on the 30th inst.

One of the most amusing features of metropolitan life now that the police have placed an effective check on gambling, policy and lottery playing, is to watch the anetics of the members of the negro colony. Indeed, their occupation in life seems to be gone, and the heart of "little Africa" is sad. The dusky gentlemen, who for years wielded the whitewash brush and served as porters, that they might indulge in the luxury of purchasing "gigs," "stradles," "horses" and such like mysterious commodities, stand about idly, for they seemingly have nothing to live for. The typos in the newspaper offices are just as badly off and if the police were to close the drinking places, all the printing fraternity would become millionaires in a few years despite themselves. Of course lottery and policy slips are still sold, but the business is conducted under such difficulties and with such risks that none but the most insane players care to indulge in it.—The sellers carry their slips about in their pockets, and dispose of their wares in the street, in the vicinity of where they once had their offices, but as the agents of the Society for the Prevention of Crime haunt these places, the dealers are harassed out of their wits almost.

Minneapolis Harvester
AND
Twine Binder.
The only Binder Manufactured having
MR. APPLEBY'S Latest Improvements.

The record this popular binder made last season in Lenawee Co., is abundantly ample evidence to convince any farmer that this is the latest improved, easiest handled and by far the most perfect working Harvester and Binder in the market. Mr. J. F. Appleby, the inventer of the Appleby Binder superintends the construction of the Minneapolis, and with the improvements of 1883, especially the double packer trip, it is thoroughly adapted to the wants of the Michigan farmer, as there is a great variation in the size and condition of our grain the Binder can be moved instantly and easily, also the raising and lowering of the whole machine by the driver in his seat.

The machine has all the valuable points that any other has and many very vital points that no other machine has. Last season we sold 32 of these machines to some of the best farmers in this vicinity and we have a good testimonial from every one of them, besides others that own other binders that have seen the superior working of the Minneapolis acknowledge its superiority over all others. No other Binders ever sold in Lenawee Co. can produce such a record.

Mrs. H. A. Forsyth, nee Mary Eccles arrived home from Dakota yesterday, and will remain during the summer.

Senator Palmer was invited to address the western Michigan farmer's club at Grand Rapids, in June, and also his terms for the service. To the latter he replied: "I shall be very glad to meet your people at my usual terms, viz. If you will stand the address I will stand the rest."

A RUNAWAY.

Just before the hour of high noon yesterday a double team hauling a covered peddler's wagon was seen streaking it up railroad street from Raisin. They kept on in the middle of the street until they reached the Exchange hotel when they kept on the left of the railroad track and ran into a big shade tree near the sidewalk. The concussion broke the whiffletrees from the wagon and the team went on toward Newburg.—When the wagon stopped, two boxes of eggs jumped out the forward end upon the sidewalk, and about fifty tin pails keeled out the rear end into the ditch. The owner arrived in due time and finally gathered together the horses and baggage. He will probably hitch his team hereafter when he goes into a farm house to hunt hen's eggs.

RAILROAD NOTES.

Marshall Statesman: The iron thus far used on the M. & O. was purchased of the Chicago iron and steel works. This firm suspended a few weeks ago, and all further supplies will come from the Edgar Thompson steel works, Johnstown, Pa. This change of base delayed matters somewhat, but the iron is now on the ground and Assistant Chief Engineer Boch telegraphed them to commence at once. Mr. Thos. Hamilton, the bridge contractor, states that the crossing of the Michigan Central will probably be completed by next Friday. It will then take about 20 days for the ironing gang to reach Battle Creek, and in two weeks thereafter the engine of the construction train will stand in Marshall. Water tanks are being put up along the line to supply the engines. This week one was put up at Gun river, four miles from Montieth.

Coldwater Republican: Mr. J. H. McLane, who is employed in construction work on the Toledo & Michigan R. R. near Marshall, informs us that Judge Ingersoll of that city, has just received word from the builders of the T. & M. that they may proceed to work up local aid from Marshall north sufficient to put the roadbed in condition for track laying and that the road will be built. From indications the men who laid out the contributed money in this county propose to do nothing toward securing the construction to this point or further south. If anything is to be done it must be done by others making the move.

The Allegan Journal contains the following: "J. A. Latcha of the M. & O. road, says trains will be run from Allegan to Marshall by the middle of June, and the road quickly completed beyond that point. A new gang of men yesterday took the place of the strikers. No more rails will be laid till the middle of the month because the mills cannot furnish them sooner."

The young people enjoyed a pleasant dance at Bidwell's hall last Thursday evening.

Milan Wheeler, of Raisin, has sold his farm and intends to move back into the village.

Miss Kate McDowell, of St. Louis, Mo., is visiting her cousin, Miss Eva Clement, in this village.

Mr. R. P. Clement and son, of Fredonia, N. Y., were the guests of Mrs. M. P. Bigelow last week.

Miss Anna Smith, of Sterling, Ill., is visiting at the residence of Henry Smith, her uncle, for a short time.

Comfort's tulips are in all their glory now. We paid Woolston a visit Saturday and brought home a beautiful bouquet.

Friends of the soldiers will please contribute flowers. They may be left at Council Building on the morning of May 30th.

C. H. Adam, proprietor of the Sand Lake hotel, has commenced the season at his house, and is now prepared to accomodate all who come.

Our people will be content this year without any fiz-fuz, feathers or flags. At least we haven't heard that we are likely to celebrate the Fourth.

Michigan is a good state for a farmer to stay in, although it takes about six months in some of the western territories to convince them of the fact.

The state convention of the W. C. T. U. is in session this week at Adrian. The meetings began last evening and will continue through the remainder of the week.

Woolston Comfort is building an addition to his house which will be used for a kitchen. When completed his dwelling will be an unusually convenient one.

Messrs. J. C. Ayer & Co., of Lowell, Mass., have issued a neat series of album cards, which collectors will treasure. Send them a 3 ct. stamp for a full set.

There is a rosy flush of expectation and heaven-lighted radiance on the faces of the girls of the period. The spruce gum crop in Maine promises to be larger this year than ever before.

The Deerfield Record began its sixth volume last week. The Record has made a successful trip of five years on the journalistic sea. May favorable winds continue to waft its course onward.

S. B. Wakefield of Monroe, has taken the contract to put in a Y on the M. & O. road at Britton. The work will be done at once and track laying will commence at that point at an early day.

Will Robbins, of Cleveland, was in town last Saturday and Sunday, and his many friends here were glad to see him. Will is on the road now traveling for the same firm he has been with since he went to Cleveland.

Dr. I. S. Hamilton, of this village was chosen one of the vice presidents of the State Medical Society. As the Doctor is one of the oldest and most successful practitioners in Southern Michigan, it was a compliment well deserved.

Lovers of the beautiful in nature should visit Mrs. Spaulding's greenhouse on Mill street. We were agreeably surprised a short time since on strolling through this floral retreat to find so large and varied an assortment of plants and flowers.

James Moir has opened a shoe shop in Sholes' harness store, and would be pleased to receive orders from his friends who desire boots and shoes made to order. All work guaranteed. Repairing neatly and promptly attended to at reasonable rates.

Dr. R. B. House was chosen President of the State Homœopathic Medical Association at their session in Lansing last week. The rules were suspended and he was elected by acclamation, which was the first time in the history of the society that the President has been chosen in that manner. The flattering manner in which the position was given to him shows the esteem entertained for him among his professional brethren.

Mrs. Jas. A. Smyth, of Grand Rapids, is visiting friends in town.

Theme at the Baptist Church next Sunday evening—"The Life of Abel."

We understand that Slayton & Son have some good seed corn just received from Toledo.

Will. M. Osborn, of Franklin, is making some extensive improvements on his place in way of new barns, fences, etc.

Miss Franc Bryan started for Dakota last Monday. She expects to meet her brother there and look up some land claims.

I. P. Keyser started last Monday for Cincinnati to attend the U. S. Grand Supreme Lodge of K. of P. We wish him a pleasant trip.

Tecumseh is now connected with the state telephone system and we enjoyed a very pleasant chat with Will Schermerhorn the other day.

The new livery firm, Clark & Bird, have an announcement in this week's paper. They intend to have one of the best establishments of the kind ever started in Tecumseh. Give the boys a call.

An old lady of Paw Paw ordered down a telegraph pole which had been placed in her back yard, as she didn't propose to have "that paragraph pole in her yard to paragraph everything she said all over town."

Archie Richard has resigned his place as bookkeeper at M. W. Robinson's, Jackson, and gone to Wisconsin. He will run a supply store in that state in connection with the big railroad contract of Danby & Richard.

We are pleased to notice that the Singer Manufacturing Co., have established an agency for the sale of their celebrated machines in Tecumseh. Mr. M. P. Brown will act as their agent, in the rooms formerly occupied by F. J. Landgraf.

Commencing May 29, the L. S. & M. S. R'y will sell at this station tickets for one fare for the round trip for National Exposition of Railway Appliances, at Chicago. Tickets good going Tuesday and Wednesday and returning good up to and including the following Monday. Sale continuing until June 23.

'Tis pleasant to be remembered, especially by old friends. A surprise was given Rev. and Mrs. A. J. Bigelow at Birmingham, this state, on the event of the tenth anniversary of their marriage, Monday evening. Some of their Tecumseh friends hearing of it sent them a set of solid silver spoons and other tokens of not-forgetful friendship.

LADIES' WATERPROOFS.

Ladies' gossamer waterproofs are a great institution. When a lady dons a waterproof, all buttoned down before, with the hood attachment drawn over her head and fastened under her chin with a big pin, she is certainly an object of envy to the male portion of creation. Last Tuesday, as our readers will doubtless remember, was a rainy day. Perhaps that is drawing it too mild. It was a down-easter blizzard of rain, sleet and snow. The rain beat upon the window panes, the Angel of Darkness cast a gloomy pall over the earth, and every female resident of the village, clad in a waterproof, was out shopping. The little rosy-cheeked school girls, and the sedate school ma'am were all arrayed in waterproofs. The village belle of sweet sixteen, the motherly matron of forty, the genial grandmother of seventy, the sewing girl from the shop, the kitchen girl from the household were all out on a parade, and they all looked exactly alike, resembling each other as closely as so many black beans. As we sat staring out of our sanctum window at four o'clock in the afternoon, and beheld the waterproofs sailing down the sidewalk, singly, in pairs, in threes and four abreast, it reminded us of what might have been when the waters overtook Noah in the olden time. Everybody was on a level then. Mrs. Smith, the wife of our leading merchant, and Patsy Jones, a waiter girl in the Nabob House, and Mrs. Brown, the minister's lady, and Aunt Sally, the editress of Mrs. Grundy's club, and Jemima Jenkins, the renowned female temperance advocate, and Bridget O'Flanagan, the washerwoman of the west end, were as indistinguishable as one rain drop from another. Even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

And what a blessing it is to the ladies themselves to be able to go out shopping on a rainy day. No thought for the proper cut of walking dress, or the right shade of neck ribbon, or the latest style of spring hat. The morning gown and sun-bonnet, and a handkerchief about the throat to ward off the cold, answer every purpose, and the charitable waterproof covers them all, like a multitude of sins. Sancho Panza said, "Blessed be the man who first invented sleep."—The woman of to-day can wash the breakfast dishes, start Jimmy and Mary off to school, spank the baby and leave it in the care of the hired girl, slip on her gossamer and start for the store, exclaiming with all the sincerity of a woman's heart, "Blessed be the Yankee genius who first invented the waterproof."

Hillsdale is talking up the water works question.

About six inches of snow fell in Toledo on Tuesday.

A large skating party from Adrian will attend the opening at Devil's lake on June 6th.

Horatio Keyser and Jehiel Davidson have been appointed Reviewers of the township assessment roll.

The Ladies' Social of St. Peter's church will be held at the residence of Geo. Wilson, Wednesday evening of next week. Ice cream will be served.

B. Mincer, the celebrated optician, will be at the Central Hotel, Adrian, May 28; Sink's Hotel, Tecumseh, May 29; Hudson, May 31, and Watseon, O., June 2.

There was a lively row at the Salvation Army barracks in Adrian last Sunday evening, when one of the outside heathens struck out from the shoulder and laid low a soldier of the cross. The soldiers then rallied and kicked a lot of the rowdies out doors. Officers finally quelled the disturbance.

Dudine is another name applied to the female dude. The dudine wears a mashed gooseberry colored hat and a high collar, and her clothes are made to fit tight. She carries a sharp pointed parasol in lieu of the dude cane, and is often accompanied by an English pug terrier.

C. D. Bills is fencing his race track with a good permanent board fence, and making other improvements thereon, and there is some talk of holding our first fair on those grounds this year, although that matter has not as yet been definitely settled.—The July races will take place on this track.

The Central Michigan Agricultural Society hold their Spring Fair at Lansing, May 29th to June 1. A very attractive grogram is presented. There will be an exhibition and sale of farm implements, wagons, machinery, besides of all kinds of live stock, and racing as well. The speed premiums amount to $3,500.

A sad accident occurred this morning by which little Fred Johnson got his leg broken and shoulder fractured. He was riding with Bob Owen on Bill's race track in Lowry's delivery wagon, when the horse got frightened at a scraper, overturned the wagon, and dragged the boy some distance. Fred is a good boy and we are sorry to see him laid up in this way.

W. H. Brearley of the Detroit Evening News who has personally conducted $22 round trip excursions "From Detroit to the Sea," every year for the past seven years, and who is to take three more this year in June and July, has made the ascension of Mt. Washington nine times, and this year proposes to make it an even dozen.

The people of Dundee had so little use for their town pump that the old man with a scythe cut it down. Now the Reporter notifies the village council that a considerable portion of the business men of that place have use for water. This will prove a genuine surprise to the daddies, and as the charge is of a very serious nature they will probably investigate it.

Blind Boone gave two entertainments here on Friday and Saturday evenings last, and it is no flattery to say that the notices about his performances previously published are not in the least overdrawn. He is the greatest musical prodigy that has been produced in this generation.—He was greeted with two full houses, and the people will repeat the treatment whenever he should decide to visit us again.

A GRAND ARMY POST.

A post of the Grand Army of the Republic was organized here last Friday evening. Delegates were present from the G. A. R. Posts of Adrian, Ogden and Dundee, who assisted in the institution ceremonies, and our post begins work with 33 members.—The following officers were chosen:

Commander—James R. Cairns.
S. V. C.—S. P. Hosmer.
J. V. C.—Edwin B. Coffin.
Quartermaster—Henry W. Stevens.
Surgeon—C. M. Woodward.
Chaplain—G. W. Marsden.
O. of D.—James Wood.
O. of G.—John W. Cook.
Adjutant—Jehiel Davidson.
Sergeant Major—A. D. Lawrence.
D. S.—Eugene Hodges.

A DISCOVERY.

While Israel Schreder's son and his hired man were going through a piece of woods in Clinton township one afternoon last week they found a satchel which had apparently been lying there for some time. Upon examining the contents it was found to contain a certificate of deposit in favor of Sylvester Ellis for $400, given by Clark's bank, of Clinton, and several notes amounting in all to the sum of $1310 payable to Ellis. Last December Ellis' house was entered and a lot of money and property was stolen, among which were the articles found as above stated. Ellis was much depressed over his loss and became so effected that in April last he committed suicide by hanging himself in his barn. It is possible that the discovery of the satchel may lead to the arrest of the thief and it may throw some light upon the suicide.

COUNTY CONDENSATIONS.

Clinton has a case of diphtheria.

The salvation army talk of erecting barracks at Adrian.

The new telephone line to Toledo has reached Blissfield.

The Tecumseh races will come off the first week in July.

John Ed. McCollum has opened a new clothing store in Clinton.

Col. Watts, of Adrian, will orate at Blissfield on Decoration Day.

A new boiler has been put in Watson's tray factory at Deerfield.

Deerfield is talking up the celebration of the coming fourth of July.

Charley Ingals, of Morenci, has been blowing the big stumps off his farm with giant powder.

The A. O. Miller troupe of Blissfield have in rehearsal a new play, called "The Lime Kiln Club."

The school in the Rorick district of Seneca takes a vacation of two weeks on account of scarlet fever.

The regular spring donations of rheubarb have put in their appearance at the Hudson Gazette office.

An effort will be made to organize a brass band at Clinton, with Alf. Jaynes, formerly of Manchester, as leader.

Col. Eldredge, of Adrian, attended the great reunion of the Army of the Potomac at Washington last week.

The Chesterfield martial band will make the music and Capt. Miller, of Adrian, will make the talk on Decoration Day at Morenci.

Landlord Snow, of Morenci, went "up north" to locate, and after an absense of six weeks returned perfectly satisfied to stay at home.

Rev. Mr. Hayne of the Medina Baptist church received 26 accessions to his church last Sunday, the result of the winter's meetings.

Clinton News: A little four year old girl of James Martin, living in Manchester township, fell off from a bed last Saturday, and broke her arm.

Hudson Gazette: Pshaw! What do we want of a new railroad, or a manufacturing boom—we had a big dog fight, and show band playing at the same time, Wednesday. The dogs drew the crowd.

One Mrs. Wirth, of Adrian, horsewhipped C. E. Rogers, a next door neighbor, one day last week for insulting her. She is a handsome brunette about 25 years of age and handles the horsewhip handsomely.

Morenci Observer: Wilbur Page, a Morenci student in the agricultural college at Lansing, came near being drowned last week by the giving way of a bridge over Cedar river, by which he and three of his companions with the team and wagon were plunged into ten feet of water. Wilber came nearest being strangled but finally got out alive. One of the horses, a valuable one, was drowned.

The Tecumseh HERALD says "the good people of Blissfield go fishing on Sunday"—the adjective coming in through force of habit only, of course. Now at Tecumseh the good people are prohibted from either fishing or hunting, and so says the HERALD nearly everybody—men, women and children—go down on Sunday to view the railroad work. The "good people" everywhere, it seems, must have a little diversion between regular devotional exercises of the Sabbath.—Hudson Gazette.

Morenci Observer: Last Friday two little boys, one about six years old and the other three, were seen entering the woods near Mr. Fisk's in the extreme north part of the township, and their toddling steps indicated that they were lost, weary and discouraged. A neighbor, Mr. Knox, took up the little wanderers, and on closely interviewing them, found that they had strayed seven miles from their home near North Morenci. Later in the evening they were taken back to their parents, who were on the hunt for the lost ones.

Clinton News: The rock blasting which was going on here last week set the boys to trying it too. Last Friday a number of little fellows bought a few cents' worth of powder, procured an old can of some kind and proceeded to business. For a wonder they exploded two or three charges without any damage to themselves, but finally they got reckless. Their manner of exploding was to drop the can into a kettle of hot coals. But the last time they tried it, the thing didn't go off. So little Rollie Woodward thought he would help it along by blowing the coals. The result was a badly singed boy, minus eyebrows and eyelashes, and with a blistered face and nose. Luckily his eyes escaped injury.

Prof. Cordley, the piano tuner, of Jackson is in town for a few days.

It has finally been definitely decided to run the M. & O. road from Britton directly to Dundee.

The second day of the present week was a genuine blue Monday, if there ever was one.

The operators of the Commercial telegraph line utilize the line to play checkers with, especially on rainy days.

Another change has taken place in the old house of Sutton & Swan. Mr. Sutton now retires and the business has been bought by Swan & Satterthwaite Bros., who will hereafter carry it on. Mr. Sutton's extensive business interests elsewhere, we suppose, impel him to retire. The new firm is a strong one and will be a worthy successor to the old familiar names of Sutton & Swan.

Coldwater Republican, May 22.—Speaking of snow, Mr. C. D. Randall remembers of plowing corn in Bronson on the 27th of May, 28 years ago in a snow storm. Mr. H. C. Lewis remembers of seeing snow two feet deep on the 4th of June, 50 years ago, in Genesee county, N. Y. Comment is unnecessary.

Rush's Medical Association:

Dear Doctors—The three bottles of Dr. Rush's Regulator I purchased were received by express and I have taken nearly one bottle and am highly satisfied with the result. For over two years I have been troubled with sharp pains at the pit of my stomach, upon examination I found a slight enlargement of the heart, and was given no relief. The trouble grew worse and became convinced that I could not live. While in New York City last week, I called on one of the most prominent physicians there and paid me $25 for an examination and then handed your "Regulator." Knowing you to be a regular Medical Association, and not a patent medicine scheme, I ordered the three bottles. I have not been troubled since I commenced taking it, but shall continue and take the entire three bottles so as to obtain a permanent cure. You have my sincere thanks. I am, gentlemen,

Very respectfully,
WM. G. OSGOODBY.

Cured of Rheumatism in Two Hours.

Buffalo, N. Y., May 2, 1882.

Dr. Rush's Medical Association:

Gentlemen—I have been troubled with rheumatism for two years. I tried all the best advertised oils and liniments, and many first-class physicians without relief. The last Doctor I visited recommended "Dr. Rush's Blood Root Oil." I purchased a large bottle for fifty cents and applied it. In two hours I was relieved, and now am entirely well. The effects are wonderful, and I believe it the only thing in the world which will cure rheumatism.

Truly, yours,

A Frontier Incident.

A minister settled in one of our Western villages, in which the primitive manners of pioneer life had not been smoothed by refinement and cultivation, was seated in his study one day, endeavoring to arrange the heads of tomorrow's discourse, when his attention was called by a loud knock at the front door. The visitor proved to be a tall, gawky, shambling countryman, evidently arrayed in his Sunday suit, and a poor girl, attired in a dress of red calico, which, from the frequent and complacent glances bestowed on it by the wearer, was considered quite a magnificent affair.

'Want you walk in?' asked the minister, politely.

'Kind obliged, Squire; I don't know but we will. I say, you're the minister, aren't you?'

'I [illegible] minister.'

'Jest so. I reckoned as how. Jim Bolter [illegible] Jim expected Mary Jane would be [illegible] of such tackle and so many [illegible] do it.'

'You will to get married?'

'Yes, I believe that's what they call it. I say, though, mister, before we go [illegible] reckon it isn't best to go blind.'

'Oh, I never set my price. I take what they give me.'

'Well, that's all. Go ahead, minister, if you please; we're in a hurry, as Joe's got to finish a plantin' the taterpatch afore night, and Betsy, she's got to fetch the butter.'

Thus adjured, the minister commenced the ceremony, which occupied but a few minutes.

'Kiss me, Betsy,' said the delighted bridegroom. 'You are my old woman now. Ain't it nice?'

'First-rate,' was the satisfactory reply.

'Hold on a jerk,' said Jonathan, as he left his wife abruptly and darted out at the gate to where the wagon was left.

'What's your husband gone for?' asked the minister, somewhat surprised.

'I expect it's for the sausages,' was the confused reply.

Just then Jonathan made his appearance, dangling in his hand a pailful of sausages.

'Mam made them,' said he, 'and I reckon they are good. If they ain't, just you send them back and we'll send you some more.'

Early Map of Illinois.

Hon. Elihu B. Washburne presented to the city of Galena, Illinois, two old and curious maps, which were picked up by him while in Paris. The first one is a map of "Canada or New France," and was published in Paris in 1703, thirty years after the discovery of the Mississippi river at the mouth of the Wisconsin, 1672, by Joliet and Marquette. On this map both the Galena and Dubuque lead mines are put down. Mine de Plomb and they are among the first lead mines discovered by white men in the North American continent. A river is marked on this map which answers to the Galena river, but no name is given to it. The Mine de Plomb, lead mine, is located on the river. What is now Lake Michigan is put down as "Lac des Illinois," the original name of the lake. The second map was published in 1744, and is called the "Mississippi, Louisiana, the Course of the Mississippi, and the Neighboring Country." The "Mine de Plomb" is put down on this map the same as the map of 1702, but the river to which no name was then applied is given the name of "Riviere a la Mine." What is now Wisconsin is designated on this map as the "Country of the Renards" of the northern part of Illinois, the "Country of the Maroumenes," of the central and southern part of Illinois, as the "Country of Illinois;" Rock river as the "Riviere aux Bœufs ou Riviere a la Roche;" the Illinois river, as "Riviere des Illinois;" the Ohio river, as "Troyo, or La Belle Riviere;" the Wabash, as the "Riviere Ouabache, or de St. Jerome." On both maps Chicago, written "Checagou," is correctly located.

Roger's Liverwort and Tar

Is one of the most reliable cough medicines ever prepared. It has brought thousands back from death's door, who had been given up to die of consumption. Dr. Roger's Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua, has a reputation second to no other cough medicine in the world. It is a specific for asthma. Read this:

MRS. C. A. ELLIS, of Washington, D. C., writes:—"This is to certify that I used Dr. Roger's Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua for asthma, and consider it the best remedy I ever met. I have suffered all my life with it, till I used the Liverwort and Tar. It is natures own remedy."

Rheumatic Syrup Co.:

Gentlemen—I wish to acknowledge the great benefit I received from the use of your Rheumatic Syrup. I was sick for some time, and under the doctor's care, with what he called the liver complaint and rheumatism in my back and shoulders. Could find nothing to relieve me until I commenced taking Rheumatic syrup. After taking one bottle I could feel a decided improvement. I continued to use it a short time and it cured me. I most cheerfully recommend it to any afflicted in like manner. Mrs. V. H. Roe.

The Bad and Worthless

are never imitated or counterfeited. This is especially true of a family medicine, and it is positive proof that the remedy imitated has the highest value. As soon as it had been tested and proved by the whole world that Hop Bitters was the purest, best and most valuable family medicine on earth, many imitations sprung up and began to steal the notices in which the press and people of the country had expressed the merits of H. B., and in every way trying to induce suffering invalids to use their stuff instead, expecting to make money on the credit and good name of H. B. Many others started nostrums put up in similar style to H. B., with carefully devised names in which the word "Hop" or "Hops" was used in a way to induce people to believe they were the same as Hop Bitters. All such pretended remedies of course, no matter what their style or name is, and especially those with the word "Hop" or "Hops" in their name or in any way connected, with them or their name, are imitations or counterfeits. Beware of them. Don't taste one of them. Use nothing but genuine Hop Bitters, with a bunch or cluster of green Hops on the white label. Trust nothing else. Druggists and dealers are warned against selling imitations or counterfeits.

DR. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand attests it merits, stands it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammations of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Sciatica, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and All Disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and regulate the circulation of the blood; by this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to honestly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlets around each bottle.

Price 25 and 50 cents per box. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

Hindoo Farmers.

As the agriculturists are pure Hindoos so are they generally the highest caste of Hindoos—Brahmins. They never eat meat, nor anything that grows under ground. The ryttos are the poorest of the poor; large families will live for a month on a dollar. They take but one meal per diem, and that is at twelve o'clock mid-day. The women prepare for the day's consumption coarse wheat cakes called chappatis. Their thickness depends upon the purse; the richer the family the thicker the chappatis. A few garlics, a cup of milk or draught of water completes the meal, although sometimes the richer classes cook a curry of vegetables. The delightful taste that this cake must have can only be relished by the mild Hindoo. Before the ryot even thinks of eating he must bathe. He draws in a lota, a brass vessel the water necessary for his ablutions, and throws it over his back. If he desires to enjoy a thorough bath he washes himself with a peculiar earthy loam which lathers like soap. This is highly esteemed on account of its cleansing properties. Whilst he bathes himself he washes his clothes; and this he manages cleverly without stripping. His only garment is called a dhuti, which twists round his waist. He first unbinds and washes one half; then undoes and washes the remaining half. He squeezes it nearly dry, but though still damp, he dresses himself, leaving the powerful sun to do the ironing and bleaching. The middle of his head, from the crown downward, as well as his face, is clean shaved. A long tuft of hair is however, permitted to grow at the back of his head, which he leaves for the good spirits to catch in order to drag him when dead to the abodes of bliss. Directly his ablutions are over, he prays reverently to the idol, which is always placed near a tree or well. In fact, the Hindoos consider every well sacred; and a man who digs a well or plants a tree insures for himself and his descendants Heaven's pleasures. He never omits to offer puia or a thank-offering at the shrine of this particular temple; and never is he permitted to forget that the priests, who keep in repair and officiate at these holy places, require some portion of the yearly crop to keep soul and body together. Taken all in all, no better man exists than the poor Hindoo ryot. He is a mild, forgiving creature; and where he quietly sorrows, other people would commit suicide. Never in his life does he see more than four rupees, or two dollars, at one time together; and that is when his ground is lying fallow he travels for miles to some European station, and gains this fortune either by pulling punks or selling some small trifle worked by the dexterous fingers of his ignorant and wretched wife. His life is one round of never ceasing toil, and his ceaseless care is to meet the dire land tax. He has ever been a slave to the soil. Nor will the lapse of years better his condition. With child-like simplicity he firmly believes all that his gorn, or priest tells him; and is ever ready, even when his means are most limited, to assist the needy supplicants who demand his help on account of their character as religieux. He begins no journey, undertakes no business, plants no seed, without first asking from his god blessing upon the enterprise. No strong drinks ever pass his lips; he is content to work and be cheerful. In no country in the world are the peasantry poorer, than in India. In China a husbandman lives sumptuously compared to the Indian ryiat. The latter, by his religion, is forbidden to eat meat of any kind whatever, and even if he were permitted, his means, which just allow of his making bread from the coarsest cereal that grows, world certainly bar him from eating flesh.

Lamp Explosions.

All explosions of petroleum lamps are caused by the vapor of gas that collects above the oil. Of course a lamp contains no gas, but immediately on lighting the lamp consumption of oil begins, soon leaving a space for gas, which commences to form as the lamp warms up, and after burning a short time sufficient gas will accumulate to form an explosion. The gas in a lamp will only explode when ignited. In this respect it is like gunpowder. Cheap or inferior oil is always the most dangerous. The flame is communicated to the gas in the following manner: The wick tube in the lamp burner is made larger than the wick which is to pass through it. It would not do to have the wick work tightly in the burner; on the contrary, it is essential that it move up and down with perfect ease. In this way it is unavoidable that space in the tube is left along the side of the wick sufficient for the flame from the burner to pass down into the lamp and explode the gas. Many things occur to cause the flame to pass down the wick and explode the lamp. 1. A lamp may be standing on the table or mantle, and a slight puff of air from the open window or door may cause an explosion. 2. A lamp may be taken up quickly from a table and explode instantly. 3. A lamp is taken into the entry where there is a draught, or out of doors, and an explosion ensues. 4. A lighted lamp is taken up a flight of stairs, or is raised quickly to place it on the mantle, resulting in an explosion. In these instances the mischief is done by the air movement, either by suddenly checking the draught or forcing air down the chimney against the flame. 5. Blowing down the chimney to extinguish the flame is a frequent cause of explosion. 6. Lamp explosions have been caused by using a chimney broken off at the top or that has a piece broken out of the side, whereby the draught is variable and the flame unsteady. 7. Sometimes a thoughtless person puts a small wick into a large burner, thus leaving considerable space along the edges of the wick. 8. An old burner, with its air-draughts closed up, which rightfully should be thrown away, is sometimes continued in use and the final result is an explosion.

The Sexton Writes Us.

Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now a well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc.,

Female Thumbs.

The female thumb is said to be an important index to the female character. Women with large thumbs are held by phrenologists, physiognomists, etc., to be more than ordinarily intelligent—what are called sensible women; while women with small thumbs are regarded as romantic. According to certain authors, who profess to have been observers, a woman's hand is more indicative of a woman's character than her face, as the latter is, to a certain extent, under the control of temporary emotions, or of the will, whereas, the former is a fact which exists for any one who understands it to profit by. Women with square hands and small thumbs are said to make good housewives and gentle wives. This sort of women will make any man happy who is fortunate enough to win them. They are not at all romantic, but they are what is better, thoroughly domestic. Women with long thumbs have temperers of their own, and generally a long tongue. There is a kind of this to a lover. Let him, the first time he sees hold of his mistress' hand, examine, under some pretext or another, her thumb, and if it be large, let him make up his mind that as soon as she becomes a married man, he will have a young man and that his lady-love has a large palm, with cone-shaped fingers and a small thumb, let him thank his stars—for, in that case, she is susceptible to tenderness, easily flattered, very easily talked into or out of anything, and readily managed. But if she is a woman with a square hand, well-proportioned, and only a tolerably developed thumb, then she is either one of two distinct classes of women—a practical female who will stand no nonsense, or she is a designing female—a woman who cannot be duped, or a woman who will dupe him.

Pickle for Curing Meat.

A large amount of beef, pork and mutton is lost to farmers every season by not being perfectly cured. Every year a large number of recipes are published in agricultural papers for curing meat, some of which are valuable. Some thirty years ago the Germantown (Pa.) Telegraph published a recipe that was tried by a large number of people and highly commended. The next year it was republished with like results, whereupon the paper fell into the habit of publishing it every season, and it claims that no person has ever tried it for curing beef, pork, mutton, tongue, or hams and ever afterward cured meat in any other manner with satisfaction to himself. The following is a reprint of the famous recipe:

To one gallon of water take one and a half pounds of salt, one-half pound of sugar, one-half ounce saltpetre, one-half ounce potash. Use only a pure article of potash; if this cannot be obtained, omit it altogether. In this ratio the pickle can be increased to any quantity desired. Let these be boiled together until all the dirt from the sugar rises to the top and is skimmed off. Then throw it into a tub to cool, and when cold, pour it over your beef or pork. The meat must be well covered with pickle, and should not be put down for at least two days after killing, during which time it should be slightly sprinkled with powdered saltpetre which removes all surface blood, etc., leaving the meat fresh and clean. Some omit boiling the pickle, and find it to answer well, though the operation of boiling purifies the pickle by throwing off the dirt always to be found in salt and sugar. If this recipe is strictly followed, it will require a single trial to prove its superiority over the common way, or most ways, of putting down meat, and will not soon be abandoned for any other. The meat is unsurpassed for sweetness, delicacy and freshness of color.

ESTATE OF SYLVESTER ELLIS.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate Office in the city of Adrian on Monday, the 30th day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three.

Present Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Sylvester Ellis, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Abram W. Ellis, praying that administration of the estate of said deceased may be granted to Sylvanus Howell or some other suitable person.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 28th day of May next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the City of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

P. E. Arner and Caleb Satterthwaite started Tuesday for Chicago to visit the R. R. Exposition.

Last Sunday afternoon a young man named Wm. Cramer was drowned in the river Raisin a short distance east of the Raisin town house. He went to the river in company with some young ladies, among whom was his sister, and handing her his hat and watch he got into a small row boat saying he was going to take a boat ride. When the boat reached the middle of the stream it upset and Cramer was thrown into the rapid current and drawn down stream. As there was no other man on hand to help it was impossible to rescue him. The theory has been urged that he upset the boat purposely intending to commit suicide but there can be no positive proof of this. The deceased was a German, about twenty-five years old, and had been in this country two years. He had recently been in the employ of Moses Bowerman, Jr. in his stave and saw mill in Raisin.

WAS IT A SUICIDE?

The Clinton News, in commenting upon the finding of the satchel in Clinton township supposed to belong to Sylvester Ellis, thus comments on the circumstances of Ellis' suicide:

Since reading the above paragraph, we have interviewed Dr. J. W. Burchard, who was called to view the remains of Ellis, and whose testimony ought to be of considerable value. Strange to say the coroner's jury did not call on Dr. Burchard for his testimony at all. We gathered the following facts from the doctor: The old man was found sitting on a beam, a large rope (which the doctor himself removed) fastened loosely around his neck and around the beam above, the end merely tucked under and not tied. The body did not seem to hang upon the rope but was supported, apparently by the beam. The head was erect, the tongue drawn back into the mouth, the mouth and eyes closed, the pupils contracted, the face livid. The countenance was not distorted nor were the capillaries enlarged as is usual in cases of strangulation. The neck was not discolored and not the least scratch was found on the neck or side of the face where the knot came. We think all these circumstances give strong grounds for the suspicion that Sylvester Ellis came to his death from some other cause than suicide by hanging, and the matter ought to be thoroughly investigated.

Hudson Post: A horse was stolen on the night of the 16th inst., from Graham Bros., in Allen, described as dark bay or brown gelding, ten years old, a few white hairs on forehead, white collar mark, sixteen hands high, has large round feet, no shoes. Blissfield Advance: C. Fall, of Deerfield, who left here with his family and car of goods about three weeks ago for Dickinson county, Kansas, came back last Sunday fully satisfied with the advice of America's philosopher—"Go west, young man, go west." Mr. Fall says that with the prevailing drouth now pending in the vicinity of Abilene, Kansas, and the close call of the late Kansas cyclone, he thinks Michigan is about as good a country to live in as he has found. His experience was gained at a cost of about $500.

Hudson Gazette: Hudson's 2d edition of George Washington was in conversation with a trio of friends the other day, when the wonders of the telephone was under discussion. "Isn't it remarkable?" said one: "I was talking with a friend at Adrian, eighteen miles away, and could recognize his voice as easily as if he stood by my side." "Yes, gentlemen, it is indeed strange," ventured our man of the tortured truth, "but what do you think? only last night I telephoned an acquaintance in Detroit, and could not only distinguish his voice perfectly, but also smelt his breath—he had had onions for supper."

A bill has passed the legislature, through the efforts of Representative Howell, making it a misdemeanor for riding, or driving on the side of country roads (next the fence) where used for the purpose of a sidewalk by pedestrians. The township road commissioner has power to establish or discontinue such walks wherever so petitioned. The passage of the bill is a measure much to be desired by country people, as in muddy roads it is common for people to ride or drive on the sward on the side of the road, cutting it up and making it as muddy as the road itself, to the great inconvenience of foot passengers. The penalty for violation of the law, is a fine not to exceed $5 for every offense.

A large black bear was shot near Hydes lake, some five miles north of Bellevue, last week, by Philip and Jefferson Rolfe, while out squirrel hunting. Bears in Eaton county are extremely scarce, and this is probably the first one shot there in a generation.

SHUT THE DOOR!

Were you brought up in a mill?
Stop as a boatie before?
Did you work about a brick kiln
In the blessed days of yore?
Did you tend shears with mill
Upon some rocky shore?
Or toil upon a farm
Where the wind could always rake,
And thrash upon a permanent
Its unceasing harvesting?
In any case, the threatening ills
Of your youth I pass from gone.
And ask a man who I freely will
Whether you sit in the door.
And break your heart and bend your will,
Speculation on your head
And cloud of every shape and Cold, and chill and dread
Confront you with a power
And bid you take up the fight
Against the world, against sin
Against the flesh, against
Against the devil, against
Against the world, against
Against the devil, against
Against the world, against
Against the devil, against
Against the world

COMPOUND OXYGEN NOT A DRUG

A NEW TREATMENT.

For Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic and Nervous Disorders.

A CARD.

We the undersigned, having received great and permanent benefit from the use of "COMPOUND OXYGEN," prepared and administered by Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, of Philadelphia, and being satisfied that it is a new discovery in medical science, and all that is claimed for it, consider it a duty which we owe to the many thousands who are suffering from chronic and so-called "incurable" diseases to do all that we can to make its virtues known, and to inspire the public with confidence.

We have personal knowledge of Drs. Starkey & Palen. They are educated, intelligent and conscientious physicians, who will not, we are sure, make any statement which they do not know or believe to be true, nor publish any testimonials or reports of cases which are not genuine.

WAITING FOR MOTHER.

BY MARY B. BRIND.

The old man sits in his easy chair,
Slumbering the moments away,
Dreaming a dream that is all his own,
On this gladsome, peaceful day.
His children have gathered from far and near,
His children's children beside—
And merry voices are echoing through
The "Homestead" hall so wide.

But far away in the years long flown
Old Father lives again;
And his heart forgets that it ever knew
A shadow of grief and pain,
For he sees his wife as he saw her then—
A matron comely and fair,
With her children gathered around his board,
And never a vacant chair.

Oh happy the dream of the "Auld Lang Syne"
Of the years long slipped away,
And the old man's lips have gathered a smile,
And his heart grows young and gay.
But a kiss gently glows his brow
From his daughter's lips so true;
"Dinner is ready; and, Father, dear,
We are only waiting for you."

The old man wakes at his daughter's call,
And he looks at the table near—
[illegible]
[illegible]
There are tears in the eyes of his children, then,
As they gaze on an empty chair,
For many a lonely year has passed
Since "Mother" sat with them there.

But the old man pleads still wistfully;
"We must wait for mother, you know!"
And they let him rest in his old arm chair
Till the sun at last sinks low.
Then, leaving a smile for the children here,
He turns from the earth away,
And had gone to "Mother," beyond the skies,
With the close of the quiet day.

A Scathing Denunciation.

Judge Johnson, of California, in passing sentence upon a murderer who was drunk when the deed was commited, gave his opinion of dram-selling in the following vigorous language:

"Nor shall the place be forgotten in which occured this shedding of blood. It was in one of the thousand ante-chambers of hell, which mar, like plague spots, the fair face of our state. You need not be told that I mean a tippling shop, the meeting place of Satan's minions, and the foul cess-pool, which by spontaneous generation, breeds and nurtures all that is loathsome and disgusting in profanity and babbling, and vulgarity and Sabbath-breaking. I would not be the owner of a groggery for the price of this globe converted into precious ore. For the pitiful sum of a dime he furnished that poison which made the deceased a fool, and this trembling culprit a demon. How paltry the price of two human lives! This traffic is tolerated by law, and therefore the vendor has committed an offence not cognizable by earthly tribunals. But in the sight of God, he who deliberately furnishes the draught which inflames men to anger and bloodshed is particeps criminis in the turpitude of the deed. Is it not high time that the sinks of vice and crime should be rigidly accountable to the law of the land, and placed under the bar of an enlightened and virtuous public opinion?

The most reliable, carefully prepared and best purgative of the present age is BRANDRETH'S PILLS.

They are composed of Roots, Herbs and Gums of the most healing and beneficial kind.

As a family Medicine they are unrivalled, curing Head-ache, Constipation, Liver Complaint, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia—clearing the blood of all impurities—acting on the Liver, Kidneys and other important organs, removing the waste tissue, and adding years to the lives of all who use them.

For fifty years they have been used by the American public, and their constantly increasing sales show how they are appreciated.

A Perfect Remedy in 50 Diseases.

Ashfield, Mass.

I am verging on eighty years, and deem it my duty to suffering humanity to say that my long life is due to Brandreth's Pills which have been my sole medicine for half a century. I know the last forty-three years of my life is owing solely to their use. Your Pills saved me many times after the best medical skill in several States had given me up as hopeless. I have had many converts to purgation with Brandreth's Pills, and have seen them perform almost miracles of cure. For children, a few doses have cured measles, scarlet fever, and whooping cough.

In all female troubles and weakness I have never known them to fail. In adult males I have known them to cure worst cases of dyspepsia, rheumatism, kidney diseases, dysentery and diarrhoea; even dropsy, paralysis, and apoplexy have yielded to a persistent course of Brandreth's Pills. In fact I have found them the Life Elixir. They act as continual preventives against the effects of time, disease, and labor.

The True Test.

If a man is hungry within an hour more or less after a meal he is a dyspeptic, it shows his stomach is not able to dispose of what he has eaten, but to eat again, and thus impose more work, is absurdity. Take Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic which cures dyspepsia, and all stomach, liver, kidney and bladder troubles. It is a perfect tonic, appetizer, blood purifier, a sure cure for ague and malaria diseases. Price 50 cents, of Baker and Hall.

England has $10,000,000,000 invested abroad.

The New Discovery.

Dr. Deming's Pile Ointment, the discovery of a physician of wide reputation, who has achieved the greatest success, the most conspicuous distinction, and the highest honors in his profession, is a sure cure for blind, bleeding, itching and ulcerated piles. A single box has frequently been known to cure the most obstinate case, and thousands who have used this great remedy attest its efficacy.—For sale by all druggists.

THE NEW PATENT

DUST-PROOF

Stem Winding Open Face Case,

MANUFACTURED BY THE AMERICAN WATCH CO., WALTHAM, MASS.

This case is formed from solid piece without joint or seam, opening in front only, thus avoiding the usual cap, and securing greater strength and durability.

These watches are all open face. The bezel, into which an extra strong crystal is fitted with an especially prepared water-proof cement, is attached to the case by screwing it down upon and clinching it in an air-tight junction with the body of the case, which is proof against dust and moisture.

To railroad men, travelers, miners, lumbermen and others who are almost constantly exposed and who have to make frequent reference to the watch, this case is invaluable.

portance.

The following letters tell their own story.

VALDOSTA, Georgia, July 20, 1882.

"I sold one of your Patent Dust Proof Cases about ten months ago, and the other day it came back to me with the request to make it wind easier. On examination I found that the stem was rusty, and I inquired into the cause of it. The gentleman stated to me that he was starting some sawlogs that had lodged in the bend of the river, when his chain caught in a bush and threw his watch into about twelve feet of water, and he was about two hours finding it. When he got it out it was running and he thought all right. In about three months he found that the stem was hard to turn and sent it to me.

I can say that the watch is all that the company claim for it and recommend it to all railroad and mill men.

B. W. BENTLEY."

CLINTON, Iowa, April 29, 1881.

"I wish you would send me a spring for the Wm. Ellery Watch * * * By the way this Ellery is a watch I sold in your Screw Bezel Case to a farmer last fall. The first of January he lost the watch in the woods, and found it this week in about one foot of water. It had lain three months and over in snow and water, with but slight injury to the watch—only a hair-spring.

C. S. RAYMOND."

The above were very severe tests, and demonstrate beyond doubt, that for any reasonable length of time during which a watch might be under water it would receive no injury whatever.

We make these cases in both gold and silver, and as a Perfectly Dust-Proof Stem Winding Watch Case, Challenge the World to Produce its Equal.

A Dog Story.

A lady in Lowell owns a very intellectual dog, of which she desired much to have a picture. She accordingly took him to a photographic gallery, and with the assistence of the artist endeavored to make her pet take and keep a suitable position before the camera. But the spoiled dog was in an unaccomodating mood that morning, and after repeated trials the attempt to conquer him was given up in despair.

"Go home," the lady said at last, pointing to the door, "you are a bad, naughty, naughty dog." The culprit changed in [illegible] dropping his tail between his legs, slunk away in confusion. All the rest of the day he seemed to realize that he was in disgrace, crouching in corners and wearing a shame-faced air. The next morning he was missing, and all search failed to discover him. About noon he reappeared, much elated, and having fastened to his neck an excellent tin tape of himself.

Inquiry disclosed the fact that when the photographer went down in the morning the dog was there at the door of the [illegible] door was opened Carlo ran joyously up stairs and leaped into the chair on which his mistress had poised him the day previous. Seizing the situation the artist made his preparations with all possible speed, and the result was the delightful picture which the four-footed penitent had taken home as a peace-offering to his mistress.

Nearer to Nature.

Nature has made her laws with us, which we must obey or suffer the penalty. This penalty is often lung or throat trouble, which leads on to consumption. Every man believes consumption incurable. People have been educated to this belief which is proven incorrect by Dr. Bigelow's Positive Cure, which is nature's great helpmate, and it cures consumption and and all throat and lung diseases speedily and permanently. Dyspeptics Read this.

William Collins, Battle Creek, Mich. writes us: I consider that my life has been saved by the use af that most reliable medicine, Coe's Dyspepsia Cure. For many years I have suffered with Dyspepsia and used many remedies which were highly recommended, without relief. I am now permenently cured by the use of Coe's Dyspepsia cure, and upon my recommendation many others, to my personal knowledge, can testify to its great merit. It has never failed to cure.

Rheumatic Syrup Co.:

I have been a great sufferer from rheumatism for sixteen years. A part of the time I could not leave the house, and many weeks was confined to my chair, being unable to leave it without help, and three long years I was compelled to use crutches, and the pain I suffered no one can realize—except those who have been similarly afflicted. I called different physicians and tried many different kinds of liniments, but obtained no relief. My limbs were day by day being drawn more and more out of shape, and I had become completely discouraged, and supposed that I was doomed to suffer on untill death put an end to my pain, when I heard of your Rheumatic Syrup, and immediately commenced its use, and in less than one week I could see that it was helping me and after using it two months I was completely cured and to-day I am as well as ever. Rheumatic Syrup is truly a wonderful medicine for cleansing the blood and is certainly a positive cure for rheumatism, and it cannot fail to meet with great success.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, May 25th, 1883.

Thank God it is over, this "wedding of the cities," as the ceremony of opening the East river bridge has been termed. Weddings are nice enough things to look forward to by the guests, but when the excitement is all over the next day, how tired everybody feels. The particular wedding on Thursday did not differ in the least from usual affairs of this kind. The bride Brooklyn, the groom, Gotham, her and, moreover, [illegible] was arrayed in all the splendor she commanded by the [illegible] and every [illegible] on the contrary [illegible] clothing had to make the best he could of the situation. I have been serving charming friends from the country for the last sixteen hours. I have shown them Brooklyn from end to end, and as a result I am rewarded with the cheering information that Brooklyn is a very nice place because one feels so glad when getting away from it. It is singular that with its close proximity to New York Brooklyn remains more provincial than the veriest country town in interior.

The manners of the people, the little peculiarities in the dress of the men, the peculiar tinge of verdant green in the appearance of the young, the dangerous dignity of the elderly, men all combined make up an exhibition which you can find in no other city in the world. The population is divided and subdivided into little associations, coteries, etc., where the young men and young women congregate, but it has not a first-class rather club-house for men. The good people of Brooklyn believe that the bridge will materially increase the prosperity of the place. I believe, on the contrary, it will diminish it. I think it is the first step that that city has taken toward losing its identity. It will certainly be absorbed by the Empire city which is steadily but surely extending its limits. It has already absorbed a good portion of Westchester county. One need not be surprised to see it extend to Spuyten Duyvil Creek within the next twenty years. Brooklyn is bound to follow. It is a law of nature that large bodies should absorb lesser ones.

Of the growing need of more room to accommodate the armies of people that come here to settle down, let me give you the proof by producing some statistics. New York Island contains 12,500 acres, less 1000 acres which are used for public parks. 8,500 acres are covered with houses, hence there are but 3,000 vacant acres. Now, during the last ten years 2000 acres were absorbed, and of these 250 were built up within the last year. It is an easy matter to figure up how long it will take to consume the surplus. At present we are counteracting this rapid consumption by erecting tall structures from six to ten and eleven stories high, but a couple of disastrous fires will soon frighten people out of their liking for them, and then they will resume spreading over the surface of the island.

For the venders of small wares "Bridge Day" was a perfect bonanza. Everything possible was sold in the shape of souvenirs, medals, pictures, wooden and metal models of the structure, cakes and candy made to resemble the form of the bridge and the usual knick-knacks in the shape of surprises. One vender told me that he had earned nearly seven dollars on Thursday, and he sold a five cent article on which his commission was two cents. Out-of-town visitors were of course the heaviest buyers.

The most curious phase of life in the city at present is the influx of Western men to the city. The wise men used to come from the east, but it seems reserved for the year of our Lord 1883 to prove the reverse. They come here to go into finance, some take up newspapers, while others have politics in view, and most of them succeed. They have pluck and energy and if they are not always provided with capital they can always induce some capitalist to lend them a helping hand. Of course their methods and ways of thought, expression and action jar at first, but at the same time they rouse. Looking at the way the newspaper press is controlled now, it seems very much as if it were to be treated to an entire revulsion of thinking and writing. But then we may wake up something and find that mustangs lead us too hot a pace, and that driving in a comfortable carriage is a much more pleasant mode of progress.

Sahal Morse is being heartily laughed at for his new play, "Bustle among the Petticoats," which is utter audacious rot, still it pays, for everybody goes to see how bad it is and laugh at it. "When you write a play, once said a leading and now successful dramatist to me, "you must produce either a first-class one or an utterly bad one. In either case you will win money, and the chances are that the bad one, if it is without any redeeming feature will pay you better than the good one." Perhaps Mr. Morse got the same "tip" and is now following it out.

AYER'S PILLS.

A large proportion of the diseases which cause human suffering result from derangement of the stomach, bowels, and liver. AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS act directly upon these organs, and are especially designed to cure the diseases caused by their derangement, including Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Headache, Dysentery, and a host of other ailments, for all of which they are a safe, sure, prompt, and pleasant remedy. The extensive use of these PILLS by eminent physicians in regular practice, shows unmistakably the estimation in which they are held by the medical profession.

These PILLS are compounded of vegetable substances only, and are absolutely free from calomel or any other injurious ingredient.

A Sufferer from Headache writes:

"AYER'S PILLS are invaluable to me, and are my constant companion. I have been a severe sufferer from Headache, and your PILLS are the only thing I could look to for relief. One dose will quickly move my bowels and free my head from pain. They are the most effective and the easiest physic I have ever found. It is a pleasure to me to speak in their behalf, and I always do so when occasion offers."

W. L. PAGE, of W. L. Page & Bro., Franklin St., Richmond, Va., June 3, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S PILLS in numberless instances as recommended by you, and have never known them to fail to accomplish the desired result. We constantly keep them on hand at our home, and prize them as a pleasant, safe, and reliable family medicine. For DYSPEPSIA they are invaluable."

J. A. HAYES."

Mexia, Texas, June 17, 1882.

The REV. FRANCIS B. HARLOWE, writing from Atlanta, Ga., says: "For some years past I have been subject to constipation, from which, in spite of the use of medicines of various kinds, I suffered increasing inconvenience, until some months ago I began taking AYER'S PILLS. They have entirely corrected the costive habit, and have vastly improved my general health."

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS correct irregularities of the bowels, stimulate the appetite and digestion, and by their prompt and thorough action give tone and vigor to the whole physical economy.

DR. B. MINCER,

Scientific Optician!

I have devoted 25 years wholly to a study of the eye, and how to aid vision properly, and I make a specialty of fitting glasses to the eyes that have been injured by cheap, inferior glasses. I manufacture every kind of glasses, and guarantee satisfaction. Read what prominent physicians of Adrian say:

Having for some time past used glasses to improve my sight, without satisfactorily gaining my object, I called on Mr. Mincer, optician, of Detroit, who readily adapted glasses to my eyes, with which I am so well pleased, that I cheerfully speak in his favor. His method of examining and its application in selecting glasses to fit the eye can only be acquired by a knowledge of the useful organ to which must be added extensive experience. He has also adapted glasses to Mrs. Baker's eyes with which she is well pleased. I recommend him to all who need glasses adapted to their wants; poor glasses are an abomination.

V. A. BAKER, M.D.

ADRIAN, Nov. 18, 1882.

I have used spectacles bought of Mr. B. Mincer for the past three months, and find them superior to any I have ever used, and can cheerfully recommend him to any one in need of glasses, and the benefit of his experience in the science of optics to adjust proper lenses.

DANIEL TODD, M.D.

I have investigated the work of Mr. B. Mincer, optician. I have reason to believe that he understands his profession, and adjusts excellent glasses on scientific principles.

C. RYND, M.D.

Dr. B. Mincer and part of his family will visit Devils lake, upper landing, June 5th, and remain a few days. Parties desiring his services should remember the date.

Minneapolis Harvester

AND

Twine Binder.

The only Binder Manufactured having

MR. APPLEBY'S Latest Improvements.

The record this popular binder made last season in Lenawee Co., is abundantly ample evidence to convince any farmer that this is the latest improved, easiest handled and by far the most perfect working Harvester and Binder in the market. Mr. J. F. Appleby, the inventor of the Appleby Binder superintends the construction of the Minneapolis, and with the improvements of 1883, especially the double packer trip, it is thoroughly adapted to the wants of the Michigan farmer, as there is a great variation in the size and condition of our grain the Binder can be moved instantly and easily, also the raising and lowering of the whole machine by the driver in his seat.

The machine has all the valuable points that any other has and many very vital points that no other machine has. Last season we sold 32 of these machines to some of the best farmers in this vicinity and we have a good testimonial from every one of them, besides others that own other binders that have seen the superior working of the Minneapolis acknowledge its superiority over all others. No other Binders ever sold in Lenawee Co. can produce such a record.

THE WOOL PROSPECTS.

The Adrian Record says: "Several lots of unwashed wool have already been marketed here at from 16 to 20 cents per pound. Washed wool will probably sell this season in the vicinity of 30 cents a pound."

The last Michigan Farmer says:

The prospects for the wool clip are not very bright at present, and that prices will rule lower than a year ago is a certainty. This is simply the result of the very unsettled condition of the woolen goods market, which appears to be in a demoralized condition. The spring trade was of very light proportions, the unseasonable weather compelling the use of winter clothing until the present time. Goods for the spring trade therefore, remained unsold, and now it looks as if overcoats will be seasonable all summer. With manufacturers loaded up with goods they cannot dispose of, it is not very likely they will be eager buyers of wool. In fact many of them are shutting down until the market recovers from its present state of depression and inactivity.

A new and dangerous explosive material has been found. A Michigan man was making maple molasses, when the kettle of hot fluid exploded with great force, seriously scalding himself, wife and others. Some of these winter mornings when the Czar of all the Russias goes down stairs to the kitchen to help his wife bake the cakes for breakfast, and when she stirs the hot syrup to keep it from burning it will explode and then the world will be horrified by reports of a dynamite explosion, and more of the Rushers will be annihilated.

A fundamental error of the theory of the protectionists is that taxation is a productive force. Taxation creates nothing. It merely transfers wealth. In the case of protective taxation it takes money from those who have earned it by a productive labor and transfers it to the beneficiaries of the system—those for whose benefit the taxation is levied—the manufacturing capitalists.

The party who stole the flowers from Grandpa Hendryx's yard last Tuesday night had better keep it quiet. Mr. Hendryx had a nice lot of flowers saved on purpose for Decoration day and they were all stolen Tuesday night by some sneak thief.

An inquiry as to the exact time and place of the reunion of the old Fourth Michigan Inf., brought forth the following:

HILLSDALE, Mich., May 15, 1883.
DEAR COMRADE—The annual reunion of the members of the Old Fourth Michigan Volunteer Infantry will occur at Sturgis, Mich., on the 20th day of June next. A cordial invitation is extended to all the comrades to be present. The citizens of Sturgis will give the old boys a warm welcome.
A. B. LAFLEUR, Secretary. H. W. MAGEE, President.

Elkhart Daily Journal: A good audience assembled last evening at the opera house to witness the drama of Shiel Agar as presented by the Sullivans. The play is a most popular one, and the plot is of thrilling interest, intermixed with comic and ludicrous scenes, which keeps one in readiness continually for a good hearty laugh. Miss Josie, as the fun loving Irish girl, and beautiful songstress, is unsurpassed, being all vivaciousness and life, while Dan is a true fitting representative of the big-hearted, rollicking, brave Irishman, ever ready for a fight when it is for the protection of woman and honor. They will always be welcomed by those who were fortunate enough to hear him last night.

A REMINISCENCE.

We are always glad to get hold of historical reminiscences which throw any light upon the early history of southern Michigan. The following item clipped from an exchange shows that Senator Lapham, of New York, was in early times a resident of Tecumseh for a few days and passed through quite a thrilling experience here:

Senator Lapham says he once, and once only, got real satisfaction out of Michigan. Forty-five years ago he was tramping through that State, carrying one end of a surveyor's chain, when he was taken sick with bilious fever at Tecumseh. A doctor, whose name he has forgotten, dosed him with calomel until he was nearly dead, so that another physician had to be called in to save him. The first doctor presented a bill for $69 for nine visits, and Mr. Lapham paid him in money on a Clinton wild-cat bank. The next day the bank burst, which was the satisfaction.

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAY 31, 1883.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

Geo. Smith, of Toledo, was in town last Tuesday.

Rather catching weather along back for planting corn.

New spring hats are beginning to make their appearance.

A portion of the street work at Cadillac consists of clearing the streets of stumps.

Carpenters are finding plenty of work in the country this season, many of the farmers in this vicinity are having buildings of different kinds put up.

Mrs. D. Bruner and Miss Hattie Bruner, of Springfield, O., mother and sister of our former townsman, Johnny Bruner, and Mrs. D. Zollars, are visiting at the home of the latter in this village.

The annual meeting of the State Pioneer Society has been postponed from June 6th and 7th to June 13th and 14th. This action has been taken by reason of the adjournment of the legislature on the 6th of June.

The schedule of the races on the new circuit is as follows. They will open at Brooklyn next week. Brooklyn, June 6, 7 and 8; Hudson, June 13, 14 and 15; Morenci, June 20, 21 and 22; Adrian, June 27, 28 and 29; Tecumseh, July 4, 5 and 6.

Mrs. C. T. Chapin, of Cadillac, was in town the first of the week. She only remained one day however, which her friends considered rather a short visit. Mr. Chapin is in good health and is now foreman in the Cadillac News office.

Mr. W. H. Brearly of the Detroit (Mich.) Evening News, who has personally conducted $22 round trip excursions "From Detroit to the Sea," every year for the past seven years, and who is to take three more this year in June and July, has made the ascension of Mt. Washington nine times, and this year proposes to make it an even dozen.

The next quarterly meeting of the Washtenaw County Pioneer society will be held in Manchester on Wednesday, June 6th. At the last annual meeting of the Society a large handsome photograph album was presented them. Pioneers are requested to send their photos to be inserted for the inspection of the present and future generation.

Reported from Washington that no further changes will be made in Michigan internal revenue collectorships until after the question of consolidating the districts shall have been finally settled; but it is not improbable that two new districts will be made out of the existing districts, with the collector for one stationed in Detroit and for the other in Grand Rapids.

Brooklyn Exponent: On Sunday evening last while out driving with his wife and daughter, Philip Howland met with a runaway accident. One of the wheels happening to run into a rut caused the horse to take fright, and throwing out the occupants of the vehicle, although without seriously injuring them. The horse ran for a short distance and succeeded in making a wreck of the buggy.

Mr. John L. Schoolcraft, of Adrian, who has recently been admitted to the bar, has opened a law office in the rooms over Munger's store, in front of Burridge's justice office. Mr. Schoolcraft was deputy sheriff under Sheriff Cairnes and hence had considerable experience before studying law in a beneficial direction. He will have pleasant office rooms and hopes to secure his share of the public patronage.

We have received from county clerk Hunter a copy of the pamphlet containing the proceedings of the Board of Supervisors for the past year. It also contains the election returns as reported by the county canvassers, and a list of all county and township officers now in office. Mr. Hunter is deserving of credit for the accurate manner in which he has performed the work of compilation. The printing was done at the Press office.

The summer running meeting of the Chicago Driving Park will begin June 23d and continue until July 4th. We acknowledge the receipt of a complimentary ticket to the show, for which we take off our hat and make our politest bow. It grieves us to the core to be unable to accept the invitation, but we must do so, as there would be no one at home—in our absence—to keep track of the runaways, dog fights and read proof of the obituary poetry.

A party of relatives and friends convened by special invitation on May 23rd, at the house of Charles Wells, in Franklin, which for rare good cheer, and unassuming display, vividly brought to mind the days of long ago when in "ye olden time" grand parents, children, grand-children, neighbors and friends gathered and separated, without the withering forms of modern conventionalism, which too often are suffered to mar the occasion. The day was fine, and the repast would have done honor to a court.

S. A. James was home to spend Sunday.

A post of the Sons of Veterans has been organized at Adrian.

One of Barnum's advance advertising agents was in town yesterday.

A large tomato crop will be grown in the vicinity of Adrian this season.

Chas. Eldredge and wife, of Dundee, spent last Sunday with their Tecumseh friends.

Co. "C" turned out 34 men strong to attend the funeral of their old comrade Lafayette Rowland last Sunday.

The addition to Slayton & Son's warehouse is growing daily. The walls will soon be ready for the roof.

John Chrysler, the advance agent of Dan Morris Sullivan's Combination was in town Tuesday arranging a date for his troupe.

S. V. R. Ely, a whilom resident of Macon, is visiting among old friends in the Clarkson neighborhood. He is now living in Elmira, N. Y.

Wm. Hanke, the miller of River Raisin, Washtenaw county, smokes a meerschaum pipe over eighty years old, which his father and grandfather smoked before him.

Thanks to Mr. Elliott Gray for late copies of the Sligo Independent. Mr. Gray starts on his return trip to Sligo next Monday and will probably remain across the big water all summer.

The members of the Tecumseh Foot Ball Club do protest against parties playing base ball upon their grounds, and they are hereby forbidden to trespass upon said grounds.

WILL HAYDEN.

Miss Ida Davis, who has been visiting friends at Adrian, Tecumseh and Clinton during the past few weeks, left yesterday for Middlesex, Penn., where she will make her home this summer.

Our old friend John Stewart, of Macon, has a mare, 17 years old, who has raised for him $1,500 worth of colts and last week she showed up another as fine a colt as ever. John wants to know if there is anything in the state to beat this.

The Library Association is now fully organized, have the books all selected, and are ready to send for them as soon as the subscriptions are paid in. Subscribers for stock who have not paid for the same will please call on Miss Jennie Rosacrans at the Post Office, and get their stock as soon as possible and thus prevent any further unnecessary delay.

The Pontiac Bill Poster tells how George Vaughan, a farmer of Bloomington, was induced by the representations of a firm known as Smith R. Clark & Co., to put an organ in his house for the neighbors "to look at" and sign a contract to the effect that when he had sold two organs he should have one free. It was the same old story, the contract turned up as a promissory note for one hundred and eighty dollars, and the men skipped.

W. T. Mosher, of this village has become a proficient taxidermist. He mounts animals of all kinds, birds, reptiles and fishes in the latest and most durable style. He also deals in hat birds, feather ornaments and bird skins. He gathers curiosities in natural history and all collections furnished by him will be accurately named. Tecumseh has long needed a business of this kind and we believe Mr. Mosher will succeed here.

Willis Merritt is stopping for a while at Boerne, Texas. The last number of the Register has this notice of his arrival there:

Willis Merritt, Esq., of Tecumseh, Mich., an attorney at law, took rooms at the American House yesterday. Mr. Merritt is in very poor health. He comes here from Galveston where he has been in attendance upon the Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor as representative from his state. He was one of the clerks in the House of Representatives during the last Congress.

Don't be in a hurry to buy a Piano or Organ. G. P. Sparks will soon open a general music store in connection with his large stock of Sewing Machines. Pianos and organs will be kept in stock on sale and to rent, and arrangements perfected by which any make of Pianos or Organs can be obtained at lowest rates; also any piece of music published in America or Europe. A few Domestic and White Sewing Machines left at old prices, soon to be advanced $5 on each style. Don't miss this opportunity to make $5. Second hand machines $8 and $10.

We judge from the following letter that E. Hause is determined to have the best tea that he can get. After buying the best grades he could find in Detroit and Toledo and not being satisfied that the best and purest teas could be had in those cities he tries buying direct from Chinamen of San Francisco who deal in purest teas especially for the China trade of that city and surrounding country. Here is the letter:

SAN FRANCISCO, May 23, 1883.
E. Hause, Esq., Dear Sir: Your favor of the 15th inst. received. It gives us much pleasure to open a trade with you, but I am sorry to say that $1.00 tea still in the custom house not got through the examination. It has been there a week; it will be up a day or two, but as soon as it comes up then I will ship them all together. Please be patient it will be there very soon. We are gentlemen,
Yours very respectfully,
QUONG CHUNG SHING & CO.

Zack Cook was in town Monday.—He still bears the scars of his severe illness but is rapidly gaining in health and strength.

We have received from Wm. Hayden late copies of the Boston Transcript containing an interesting sketch of the excursion of which he is a member.

Preparations for the art loan exhibition to be held next September and October are speedily assuming definite proportions. The bids for the new building will be opened at the office of Gen. R. A. Alger next Saturday, at 10 a. m. The building is to be one story high, with brick walls and brick partitions and asbestos roof, and making it practically fire proof. The building is also to be located not less than 25 feet away from every other structure.

Evening News: Before it knocked off work the 24th inst., the senate took up Dr. Howell's house bill to prevent malicious annoyance by writing, etc., and passed it; and when it gets the governor's signature the Lenawee county authorities will have in hand a scourge to lay on the back of a dirty old cuss down in Palmyra, who has long been annoying his neighbors in a beastly manner, but in such a way that the United States laws did not reach his case. An Adrian individual may also get a dose of the same medicine mixed for the Palmyra chap.

RAILROAD NOTES.

Homer Index: The common council, at its last session by resolution instructed the street committee to require the approaches to the M. & O. railroad on Hillsdale street to be graded the full width of the street, and in such a manner as not to endanger the travelling public.

Marshall Statesman: There are 23 miles of iron laid on the M. & O. at the present time, which brings it up to the bridge crossing the Michigan Central. The workmen are to-day laying the ties on the bridge and the iron will be laid across it to-morrow or Sunday. The grade between this city and there is nearly ready for the iron, with the exception of one piece in Battle Creek, over which there is some dispute.

Marshall Statesman: Attorneys Lamb and Neale, of the M. & O., have tried a number of times to purchase the right of way across six pieces of property in the vicinity of Homer.—All the deeds are in with the exception of these pieces. The price asked by the owners, in one case $1,000 per acre, was manifestly so much in excess of the real value that the company commenced condemnation suits against the various pieces in the probate court yesterday. All the Homer parties were on hand and W. D. Adams argued their case, while James E. Neale and W. H. Porter appeared for the company. The contest was decidedly hot and dinner was dispensed with by all parties. At the conclusion Judge Ingersoll decided that in two cases the services of a jury would be needful in determining the value of the property, and in the other four three commissioners will apprize the land. The judge appointed as such commissioners Rudolph Sanderson, Abram Minges and Peter Mulvaney. The commissioners meet in Homer on Tuesday to perform their duty, while the jury meets on Thursday.

BLANKET MATINEE.

Last Thursday afternoon occurred the first trot of any kind we have had this season. Owing to the great amount of rain the track was in very bad condition making it impossible to try a running race, and almost impossible to speed horses at all. However three races were started, and resulted in lots of fun if no very good time was made. In the green race only two entries were made: George Kies's "Rock" horse and a sorrel owned by Henry Westfall, of Macon. Westfall's horse took the two first heats, but Kies got the blanket, as it was found that the Westfall horse was not "green" into about seven races.

Bills entered "Laura Keene," Elliott his sorrel mare, and Howard Sickles, Joe Emery and an old man named Mace, their black gelding, "Paul Revere," for the three minute races. Laura had no business in this class but was put in to fill up, and all supposed that the race would be between the black horse and the Elliott mare, but at the end of the first quarter old angle legs gave out and the Keene mare took both heats, just about a length ahead of the Elliott mare. As Laura had no business in the 3 minute class Elliott's mare took the blankets.

Bills entered his black horse "Green Charlie" and Howard Sickles, the pacer, "Gray Benny" for the free for all. This was a fair race and simply wonderful for the condition of the track. Charlie took both heats.

It is in justice to Mr. Bills to say that he has his track in good shape for driving, and plenty of work was done to put it in splendid condition for that day had the weather been anything that could naturally be expected. Several horses were here that did not trot at all on account of the heaviness of the track.

DECORATION DAY.

The observance of Decoration Day here yesterday, although a quiet and informal one, was appropriate and impressive. Our fallen heroes were fitly remembered, and the slight tribute to their memory of covering o'er their graves with beautiful flowers was performed by tender hearts and willing hands. The morning air was calm and cool, with a refreshing breeze, and when ten o'clock arrived, the hour for the procession to form, a large crowd had gathered on the streets to witness the ceremonies. The procession was formed at the corner of Chicago and Evans streets, headed by Cp. C. followed by members of Lyons Post G. A. R. and the old soldiers, and marched to the cemetery. Here brief exercises were held in the following order:

1—Vocal music by the Glee Club.
2—Prayer by Rev. W. H. Babbitt.
3—Music.
4—Music by the Glee Club.
5—Benediction by Rev. Geo. W. Hudson.

The address was delivered by Rev. C. E. Conley, pastor of the Baptist church. Our space will allow but the merest outline of his remarks.

After remarking upon the importance of the observance of National Holidays and upon the beautiful design and grateful spirit of Decoration Day, he brought out the fact that the struggle which ended 1865 did not begin with the firing upon Fort Sumter. It began more than two centuries ago; it was the inevitable conflict between two distinct types of civilization, which existed in the United States up to the time of the triumph of the Union armies, viz: that of New England puritanism and that of Southern chivalry. They could not exist together. When they met in the civil war one or the other must be annihilated. Looking back upon the conflict, after a lapse of twenty years, we now can see that both "the blue and the gray" were sincere. Indeed, so sincere were they that neither party could believe in the sincerity of the other. In the spirit of charity a thoughtful nation decorate the graves of the "blue and the gray" without discrimination. The Puritan type of civilization triumphed, because it was the strongest. The elements of its strength are three fold. New England, and the north believe in labor; they believe in its dignity, in its value as an agency for the development of character. The manhood it gives is hardy both in body and mind. They also believe in education; the mind of the average citizen is intelligent, cultured, disciplined. They also believe profoundly in a religious conscience, in its supremacy, its sacredness, in its inalienable right to freedom. In other words they believe in the supremacy of the individual. These elements of strength were lacking in the southern character. The southern people despised labor, frowned upon general intelligence, and their religious sentiments were warped by their overmastering desire to perpetuate the institution of slavery. In short they believed in the supremacy, not of the individual, but of the aristocratic few. When the representatives of these two civilizations met on the field of battle, but one result could follow.—New England and the north were the iron which was to crush southern effeminacy. Our victory was the triumph of cultured and righteous strength.

We would not shut our eyes to the fact that the Republic is yet menaced by formidable dangers. It is endangered by the encroachments of capital, whose tendency is to oppress the masses. It is endangered by the fury of intemperance, which slays more men each year than did rebel bullets. It is endangered by the growing power of Rome, whose spirit is antagonistic to free institutions. But the Republic is safe so long as we adhere closely to the principles which gave the men of '61 the strength to annihilate the collossal power of Southern chivalry.

As we stand to-day by the side of the graves of the heroic dead, let us reconsecrate ourselves to the principles, which have made us conquering champions of right, and put our trust in the God of battles, who also is the God of human freedom and human right.

The graves of the fallen comrades were then decorated by squads of surviving comrades and Co. C.

We give below the names of the soldiers whose graves were honored, the list embracing those who had fought in 1812, in the Black Hawk war and in the Rebellion. The graves were looked up yesterday, and each one marked with a small flag, so that the ceremony of decoration was very expeditiously done.

In this connection we would state that Perry Hosmer, who had charge of this part of the work, desires that any names which may have been omitted from this list should be handed to him. As the old list has been lost it is quite possible that some may have been overlooked. Mr. Hosmer also wishes to get a list of all the old soldiers of Macon, Ridgeway, Raisin and Clinton.

WAR OF 1812.

John F. Brown, Abijah Russell, Thos. Griswold, R. B. Gillespie.

BLACK HAWK WAR.

Gen. J. W. Brown, Milton Wood, Henry Hewitt, Wm. McNair, Wm. H. Patchen, Uri Carter, James Hampton, James Stitts, Asa Gilmore, Samuel L. Spafford.

WAR OF THE REBELLION.

Faron Anderson, F. M. Roberts, James McNair, Alanson Conklin, John Culbertson, James R. Wheeler, Martin B. Pennock, Wm. McCaughn, John Gilbert, Samuel D. Southworth, Charles Doke, Stephen Mosher, Emory Waller, Theodore Lareau, Wm. Boster, Alvin Tripp, W. H. Stout, Ladd, W. Warren Estes, Alfred Durling, N. Jones, John Durling, James Morseman, Albert Randall, H. G. House, Abel Harding, Wm. Johnson.

The cemetery never looked more beautiful, and the exercises were sincere and impressive. When the day can be observed with so little outlay of time and money for preparation, it seems almost akin to sacrilege to pass it by unnoticed. Let us cheerfully devote one day of the three hundred and sixty-five in recalling the heroic deeds of our fallen soldiers, and bestowing a floral tribute to their memory.

DIED.

ROWLAND—At his residence on Logan street, on Friday, May 25, 1883, Lafayette Rowland, of consumption, aged 34 yrs. and 17 days.

Lafayette Rowland was a young man well known to all in this community. He has always lived in this community. Sept. 11, '72, he married Miss Emma Hawker. August 7, 1876, his wife died of consumption. Two children blessed their home, but both are now with their mother, and it is now that we note the death of the last one of a family of four, the memory of whom can never die. Lafe was an honest man, a true friend, generous to a fault, and lived for his friends rather than for himself. Nothing more need be said of any man. He had no enemies and was as a brother to all who associated with him. The little family are all together now and their happiness is our sorrow. His funeral was conducted by the state troops at his residence Sunday afternoon, a large number of friends being present.

Making Love to a Female Medical Student.

Miss Mary Flynn was studying medicine and being courted at the same time. Mr. William Budd was attending to the latter part of the business. One evening, while they were sitting together in the front parlor, Mr. Budd was thinking how he should manage to propose. Miss Flynn was explaining certain physiological facts to him.

"Do you know," she said, "that thousands of people are actually ignorant that they smell with their olfactory pedunculi?"

"Millions of 'em," replied Mr. Budd.

"And Aunt Mary wouldn't believe me when I told her she couldn't wink without a sphincter muscle!"

"How unreasonable!"

"Why, a person cannot even kiss without a sphincter!"

"Impossible!"

"I hope I may die if I can!"

"Oh, Mr. Budd, it is too bad of you to make light of such a sufferer!"

Mr. Budd seized her hand and kissed it. She permitted it to remain in his grasp.

"I didn't notice if the sphincter helped me then or not. Let me try again."

Then he tried again, and while he held her hand she explained to him about the muscles of that portion of the human body.

"It is remarkable how much you know about such things," said Mr. Budd—"really wonderful. Now, for example, what is the bone at the back of the head called?"

"Why, the occipital bone, of course."

"And what are the names of the muscles of the arm?"

"The spiralis and infra-spiralis, among others."

"Well, now, let me show you what I mean. When I put my infra-spiralis around your waist, so, is it your occipital bone that rests upon my shoulder-blade, in this way?"

"My back hair, primarily, but the occipital bone, of course, afterwards. But, oh, Mr. Budd, suppose pa should come in and see us?"

"Let him come! Who cares?" said Mr. Budd boldly. "I think I'll exercise a sphincter again and take a kiss."

"Mr. Budd, how can you?" said Miss Flynn, after he had performed the feat.

"Don't call me Mr. Budd; call me Willie," he said, drawing her closer. "You accept me, don't you? I know you do, darling."

"Willie," whispered Miss Flynn, faintly.

"What, darling?"

"I can hear your heart beat."

"It beats only for you, my angel."

"And it sounds to me out of order. The ventricular contraction is not uniform."

"Small wonder for that when its bursting for joy."

"You must put yourself under treatment for it. I will give you some medicine."

"It's your own property, darling, do what you please with it. But somehow the sphincter operation is the one that strikes me most favorably. Let me see how it works again?"

But why proceed? The old, old story was told again, and the old, old performance of the muscles of Mr. Budd's mouth was enacted again. And, about eight years later, Mr. Budd was wishing that Mary would catch some fatal disease among her patients, and Mary was thinking that the best possible use Willie could be put to would be as a subject for the dissecting table.—Max Adeler.

Compressed peat is considerably used in London and nearly all the towns of considerable size in Great Britain. On one of the most important railroad lines also compressed peat has been used for some time, with entire satisfaction, the fact appearing from the engineer's report that twenty-one pounds of peat will raise steam for a mile of transit, while twenty-six pounds of coal are required. Its cost is less than one-half that of coal.

Dr. Rush's Medical Association:

Dear Doctors—The three bottles of Dr. Rush's Regulator I ordered were received by express last week. I have taken nearly one bottle, and am thoroughly satisfied with the result. For over two years I have been troubled with sharp pain at my heart. My physician, upon examination, pronounced it enlargement of the heart, and was unable to give me any relief. The trouble grew worse, until I had become convinced that I could not be cured. While in New York City, last week, I called on one of the most prominent physicians there, who charged me $25 for an examination and then recommended your "Regulator." Knowing you to be a regular Medical Association, and not a patent medicine scheme, I ordered the three bottles. I have not been troubled since I commenced taking it, but shall continue and take the entire three bottles so as to obtain a permanent cure. You have my sincere thanks. I am, gentlemen,

A Parrot's Opinion of Constables.

The St. Louis, Republican says that Tom Hand, a constable desiring to seize $20 worth of goods on an execution against Mrs. Morton, of St. Louis, could find nothing but Mrs. Morton's pet poll parrot, which was perched away up on a window-sill. Tom was about to leave with empty hands when the parrot sung out: "Hilloa! Hilloa! Hilloa!" Tom looked up and saw the bird. "Here's something," said he to himself, "that's worth $20; I'll hitch on to it." He reached up to grab Poll, but Poll would not be seized and pecked at him and sung: "Hands off! Hands off! I'll call the peelers!"

"I'm a constable," said Tom. "I've got the papers here, and you can't fool around me."

"Darn the papers," said Poll. "Police! police!"

Tom made another grab, and this time he caught Poll by the tail and carried her over to Mrs. Morton's. When he got there he put her in a basket. As soon as Poll's throat was free again she opened another tirade on Tom. She called him all manner of names, and ended each sentence with "You can go to Chicago, you're no gentleman."

Poll had begun to give the court, as Tom said, the constable, a piece of her mind when Mrs. Morton came in and paid the $20 sued for. She said she would sooner pay $40 than lose her Poll. Then she picked Poll up and kissed her and carried her away; and as they went out of court Poll cried with a loud voice, "O, the loafers; O, the dirty loafers!" Constable Carroll, his deputy and all the other officers of the court say that Mrs. Morton's parrot can "cuss" louder and more to the point than any man they ever saw.

"Stage Kisses."

Nym Crinkle's Footlights describes the different types of stage kissing, from Abbott's spiritual kiss to Soldene's explosive burst. It says: "There was the platonic kiss of Kellogg, who used to fling them like icicles with her finger tips, and as Sher. Campbell once said, "There were chilblains in them. There was the Presbyterian kiss of Ada Dyas, who used to plant it on Montague's left ear, or on the back of his neck, and always created an impression in the gallery that she bit him; and the Letta bubble, which always sounded like the pulling of a cork, and seemed to be a number of linked kisses effervescing; and the Corinthian kiss of Wainwright—a severe affair; somewhat motherly, and when dropped upon a stock actor always frightened him a little bit, as if he had pulled a New Testament out of his pocket instead of a pack of cards; and the Carey kiss—ah! The romantic Carey kiss, that never began anywhere and never ended—that ran down the back and tingled in the arms and legs, and made the hair stand on end, and was accompanied with laughter, whose echoes were undying; and the cavernous Soldene kiss, that opened its ponderous and marble jaws with a report like the bursting of an india rubber balloon. Who shall formulate all these schools for us? Certainly not Abbott; for hers is the spiritual kiss, and we are not educated up to it."

What the Minister Says.

Homer, Ill.

Mr. A. Kiefer—My Dear Sir:—I have been afflicted for the last four years with derangement of the Liver, causing Dyspepsia, Headache, Nausea, and general derangement of the whole system. I have tried a great many preparations, but found no relief until I tried one bottle of your Taraxine, which has permanently cured me. I also found it to be good for the Ague. I commend it to all who suffer with derangement of the liver. Very truly yours, Rev. Thomas Whitlock.

Coffee and coffee grounds are said to be excellent fertilizers for plants.

Catarrh causes throat and lung difficulties. The positive remedy for catarrh, hay fever, and cold in head is Elys' Cream Balm. Price 50c.

Apply into nostrils with little finger.

For three winters I have been afflicted with catarrh and cold in the head. Last winter I used Ely's Cream Balm, and it accomplished all that was represented. T. F. McCormick, Judge Common Pleas, Elizabeth N. J., Aug. 25, 1880.

Ely's Cream Balm, an unusually meritorious article, is recognized as such by our customers. The only catarrh cure that has proved to be what was claimed for it. I recommend its use to my friends and customers as a cure for catarrh, hay fever, cold in the head, &c. E. R. Wilson, Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Sexton Writes Us.

Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now a well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc., David Sexton.

The Bad and Worthless

are never imitated or counterfeited. This is especially true of a family medicine, and it is positive proof that the remedy imitated is of the highest value. As soon as it had been tested and proved by the whole world that Hop Bitters was the purest, best and most valuable family medicine on earth, many imitations sprung up and began to steal the notices in which the press and people of the country had expressed the merits of H. B., and in every way trying to induce suffering invalids to use their stuff instead, expecting to make money on the credit and good name of H. B. Many others started nostrums put up in similar style to H. B., with variously devised names in which the word "Hop" or "Hops" were used in a way to induce people to believe they were the same as Hop Bitters. All such pretended remedies or cures, no matter what their style or name is, and especially those with the word "Hop" or "Hops" in their name or in any way connected with them or their name, are imitations or counterfeits. Beware of them. Touch none of them. Use nothing but genuine Hop Bitters, with a bunch or cluster of green Hops on the white label. Trust nothing else. Druggists and dealers are warned against dealing in imitations or counterfeits.

CATARRH

HAY-FEVER

A POSITIVE CURE

ELY'S CREAM BALM

FOR Catarrh & Hay Fever. Agreeable to Use.

Unequaled for Cold in the Head, Headache and Deafness, or any kind of mucous membrane irritations, inflamed and rough surfaces. A preparation of undoubted merit. Apply by the little finger into the nostrils. It will be absorbed, effectually cleansing the nasal passages of catarrhal virus, causing healthy secretions. It allays inflammation, protects the membranal linings of the head from additional colds, completely heals the sores and restores the sense of taste and smell. Beneficial results are realized by a few applications.

A Thorough Treatment will Cure.

Cream Balm has gained an enviable reputation wherever known; displacing all other preparations. Send for circular containing full information and reliable testimonials. By mail, prepaid, 50 cents a package—stamps received. Sold by all wholesale and retail druggists.

ELY'S CREAM BALM CO., Owego, N. Y.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, all Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

Thousands Say So.

Mr. T. W. Atkins, Girard, Kan., writes: "I never hesitate to recommend your Electric Bitters to my customers, they give entire satisfaction and are rapid sellers." Electric Bitters are the purest and best medicine known and will positively cure Kidney and Liver complaints. Purify the blood and regulate the bowels. No family can afford to be without them. They will save hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills every year. Sold at fifty cents a bottle.

Sold by C. A. Wright & Co.

A lecturer once prefaced his discourse upon the rhinoceros with "I must beg you to give me your undivided attention. Indeed, it is absolutely impossible that you can form a true idea of the hideous animal of which we are about to speak unless you keep your eyes on me.

Balm in Gilead.

There is a balm in Gilead to heal each gaping wound;
In Thomas' Eclectric Oil the remedy is found.
For internal and for outward use, you freely may apply it:
For all pain and inflammation, you should not fail to try it.
It only costs a trifle, 'tis worth its weight in gold;
And by every dealer in the land this remedy is sold.

Man is master neither of his life nor of his death. He can only offer his fellow citizens his efforts to diminish human suffering, and show his unshakable belief in the extension of freedom.—[Victor Hugo.

How Seldom

Can a man refrain from chopping the leaves of the Burdock with his cane as he passes; it is "only a weed," and yet few plants or weeds are so valuable, and few preparations so popular, as Burdock Blood Bitters, in which all its valuable properties are so skillfully combined. It cures dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation gout and all diseases arising from impurities of the blood. Price $1.

The Live Stock Journal says: "A moderate quantity of cayenne pepper, mustard or ginger can, with great benefit, be added to the food of fowls to increase their vigor and to stimulate egg production. This diet, although apparently artificial, is really natural; for wild birds of the gallinacean family have access to very many highly-spiced berries and buds—articles hat give the "game flavor" to their flesh.

Positive Cure for Piles.

To the people of this county we would say we have been given the agency of Dr. Marchisi's Italian Pile Ointment—emphatically guaranteed to cure or money refunded—internal, external, blind, bleeding or itching piles. Price 50 cents a box. No cure, no pay. For sale by Waldo & Doty, druggists.

Every man shall assuredly meet with an hour of temptation, a crisis in critical hour, which will especially try him.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best alterative, tonic, diuretic and blood purifier, over produced.

Calls for clergymen are frequently heard from the frontier, but not often for the kind described in the following passage from the Aurora (Nev.) Herald: "We are sorely in need of a preacher, but we don't want any cheap trash. "We want a good muscular christian, who can snatch sinners by the scruff of the neck and drag them howling up the plane of righteousness, and who will not drink more than he can hold. Such a man will get a right smart layout here."

THE QUESTION IS

Are you a Dyspeptic? Have you Indigestion? Is your Liver sluggish? Does your food trouble you? Does sleep fail to refresh you? Is your appetite and energy gone? Zopesa will cure you, tone you up, and invigorate your whole system. It is a gentle purgative, acts upon and gives strength and energy to the digestive apparatus. It is strongly anti-billious; carries off all surplus bile, tones the Liver, gives sound Digestion and speedy health to the Dyspeptic and the Billious. Try a 10 cent sample at least.

A Skin of Beauty is a Joy Forever.
DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S
Oriental Cream or Magical Beautifier.
Purifies as well as Beautifies the Skin.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of thirty years and is so harmless we taste it to be sure the preparation is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. The distinguished Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut ton (a patient) "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the Skin preparations." One bottle will last six months, using it every day. Also Poudre Subtile removes superfluous hair without injury to the skin.

DO THEY ALL SEE?
WARREN CO., PA., VILLAGE OF ENTERPRISE.
Personally appeared before me Holland Sutliff, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: That he resides in the Village of Enterprise, Warren Co., Pa. That for the space of six weeks or more he was bed-fast, he endured terrible suffering from rheumatism; and during this time he could get no rest or sleep, and was not able to do any work. He had tried all and every remedy he could hear of, and had a doctor attending him all this time, and was growing worse all the time until he was recommended by a friend to take Wilson's Lightning Remedy for Rheumatism. This medicine gave him immediate relief and performed a perfect cure in forty-eight hours, and that he is now perfectly free from the disease. H. SUTLIFF.

Rheumatine!
An Internal Remedy and a Sure Cure for all kinds of Rheumatic Complaints!

If you are suffering from
Kidney Complaints
Give Rheumatine a fair trial. You will never regret having done so.

From Mr. F. Moshell, Passenger Conductor on the New York and Hudson River R'y.
SYRACUSE, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1883.
My Dear Mr. Sutherland.—My wife having suffered greatly from rheumatism, she was induced to try your Rheumatine. After taking only two bottles she was completely cured of rheumatism, and her general health greatly improved.
I also took three bottles of Rheumatine with the result that I now find my Rheumatism entirely gone, and a very marked improvement in my general health. I consider Rheumatine a first-class remedy for rheumatism and all affections of the kidneys. I am, yours truly, FRED MOSCHELL.

ESTATE OF HIRAM REYNOLDS.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, &c.
At a session of the Probate Court, for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, on Monday, the 7th day of May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three.
Present Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.
In the matter of the estate of Hiram Reynolds, deceased.
On reading and filing the petition of Benjamin F. Reynolds, praying for the probate of an instrument now on file in this court, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, and that administration of said estate may be granted to petitioner and Charles Lawson, executors in said will named.
Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 4th day of June next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.
And it is further ordered, That said Petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published, in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee, three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

W. C. Jordan, services as Street Com	34 00
John McConnell, labor in cemetery	35 26

On motion the report was accepted and adopted, and orders directed to be drawn for the respective bills.

On Streets:

Make verbal report that the estimated cost of paving Chicago street as proposed at last session would be $1,800.

The matter was still left in the hands of the street committee.

The committee on public grounds and buildings report that they have been unable to secure a suitable place for a pound and recommend that the village purchase a lot suitable for that purpose.

On motion the matter was referred back to the committee for further consideration.

On Cemetery:

Make verbal report recommending that Mr. J. S. Hendryx be permitted to remove two trees from his lot in the cemetery, as they are withering and no longer of any value.

The same committee also report that certain parties without consent of the council, or the committee, have cut down and removed trees from the cemetery grounds, contrary to the rules and regulations governing the same.

On motion the recommendation of the committee pertaining to the trees on Mr. Hendryx's lot is adopted and the rest of the report referred back to the committee for investigation, the same to be reported to next meeting of council, with recommendations from the committee.

The President asks for more time in which to report on the cost of a suitable safe, which is granted.

NEW BUSINESS.

On motion it is Resolved, That at the first regular meeting of each month the Marshall and Street Commissioner shall hereafter present to council a written statement of all services rendered by each of them and all persons acting under them during the previous month.

The following claims were presented and referred to Finance Committee:

A. James, services as assessor and on Board of Review	$52 00
Jehiel Davidson, same	27 00
A. W. Mills, services on Board of Electors	2 00
E. Hause, services on Board of Review	12 00

The assessors presented the asssessment roll as corrected and approved by the Board of Review, which shows the aggregate valuation of the real estate of the village to be $960,750
Personal property. - - 431,150

Total, - - $1,391,900

On motion the roll as presented was adopted as the assessment roll of the village for the current year.

Council then adjourned.

RAILROAD NOTES.

Allegan Journal: Stone are being drawn to-day for the piers of the T. & M. depot in this city. The building will be of wood, is all framed and, as an interested party said, "will go up like a mushroom, being built by experienced carpenters who have erected its duplicate in several places before and thoroughly understand every move to shorten time.

Battle Creek Journal: The trestle work on the T. & M. railroad at the crossing of the Michigan Central near Augusta was completed on Saturday. The heavy grading at that point is also completed. The iron is now laid across the trestlework to this side of the Central railroad. There is now no hindrance to the laying of the track to this city, as the roadbed is made and the material for the track is at hand. The large gang of hands that have been working at the crossing has been transferred along the line, to prepare the roadbed through the city for the iron. In a few days we may expect to see the construction train within the city limits.

Marshall Statesman: J. H. McLane, the contractor on the M. & O. states that work the entire length of the line is progressing finely. One gang is at Ceresco still, but it is simply dressing up the top of the grade and its work will be done in two days.—The ironing force is to-day within a mile of Battle Creek and will be in there to-morrow. The crossing of the C. & G. T. line will doubtless be effected Sunday while there are but few trains running, and Monday night will see them this side of the city limits. The ironing goes on at the rate of a mile per day, and should no unforseen delay prevent we may expect that the track will be laid into this city one week from next Saturday.—It is expected that ironing will soon commence on the southeastern end of the line and come this way, so that the work will be accomplished sooner, and when the two gangs meet the ironing will be finished.

THE DRIVEN WELL PATENT.

The following article clipped from the Michigan Farmer should be cut out and preserved for reference:

Many of our readers will be interested in learning that the celebrated "Driven Well patent" owned by Col. Nelson W. Green, has been held null and void by the United States Circuit Court for the District of Iowa. The opinion in full has not yet been received, having been only very recently delivered; but it is understood that the grounds for the decision are: 1st, abandonment to the public for several years before the patent was applied for; 2nd, priority of use, and 3rd, the want of novelty. The court holds the reissue of the patent is void because it grants more and broader claims than the original patent covered. This is a very sweeping decision. It may be the beginning of the end of a very long and hotly contested litegation. Suits have been begun against hundreds of alleged infringers all over the country. The patent has been sustained in several cases. An appeal from a decision of the United States Circuit Court for the District of Indiana to the Supreme Court resulted in an equal division of that court, which under the law sustained the decision of the lower court. This cannot happen again, as the Supreme Court cannot be equally divided, it now having nine members.

The driven well patent was granted to Col. Nelson W. Green, of Boston, in 1868, and reissued in 1871. It claims the process of constructing a well by driving or forcing an instrument into the ground until it reaches water, without removing the earth upward as in boring. It also claims the right to the pump and pipe constituting an air-tight well. The patent has been sustained on the ground that although tubes were driven into the ground to reach water, long before the Green patent was issued, still the principle of the vacuum, as claimed in the patent, was not known; and the chance application of a principle by one who does not know of it, or the ignorant use of a devise which by chance utilizes a principle, will not prevent one from obtaining a patent on a devise which for the first time makes intelligent use of a principle, and renders it valuable to mankind.

On the other hand it is claimed that the operation of the principle of the vacuum is largely a myth, that the driven well will work just as well if another tube is driven down alongside of it, thus letting the air into it and defeating the alleged action of the vacuum. Indeed, this ingenius method of seeking to evade the patent has often been made use of.

The writer has always maintained that when all the facts in the case are made known the patent will be found to be invalid. This recent decision in Iowa, and a still more recent one at Indianapolis by Justice Harlem of the U. S. Supreme Court, denying an injunction, go to show that this belief is well founded. There are many suits now pending in the State for infringement of this patent. The defendants have wisely formed an association for mutual defence, and this State Grange has kindly rendered assistance in the matter. These suits may never be pushed any further; but if they should, or if there should be any further attempts on the part of agents of the alleged patent to bulldoze farmers into "settling" more claims for infringement of it, the above facts should be borne in mind.

H. A. H.

DON'T BE TOO HARD ON THEM.

The Adrian Record, in commenting upon the arduous labors of the Michigan legislature, says:

The Jackson Patriot ironically remarks in speaking of the legislature: "The members are in excellent health and spirits. Five months' rest and recreation and social enjoyment in Lansing and vicinity, has been productive of the best results, in a physical sense." After all, the Patriot should be candid, and admit that there has been some work as well as play. The members of the legislature are sometimes obliged to go way off to Detroit to attend receptions, and many is the time they are up all night pouring over "measures", considering joint resolutions—to all take another drink together and passing (by) private bills, unreceipted. Often members come into the halls of legislation in the morning, looking haggard and all worn out, and thirsty and feverish, from overwork. Don't be too hard on the legislature.

We heartily concur in the following taken from our Oregon exchange:—"Those who write for sample copies will please send stamps, not for publication, but as an evidence that they don't take us for a bald-headed philanthropist, with a gold-headed cane and an income of $700,000 a year, who is printing a paper for amusement, and paying the postage on it for fun."

COUNTY CONDENSATIONS.

Onion socials are held in Hudson.

The Hudson Council rooms is being repaired.

Adrian celebrated Decoration Day in the rain.

The Hudson band is giving strawberry and ice cream socials.

The Adrian Union School Board have voted $1,500 for a town hall.

The monthly meeting of the Adrian Horticultural Society was held last Monday.

A Council of the Royal Templars of Temperance has been instituted at Clinton.

Jas. H. Fountain and family of California are visiting at their old home in Manchester.

Clinton Crabbs, of Morenci, will soon pack up his variety works and crab out of town.

B. O. Randall, of Clinton, has returned from Mt. Clemens greatly improved in health.

Miss Avery, of Tecumseh, has been engaged to teach in the Dewey district in Bridgewater.

Deerfield has got a first-class hand fire engine with 100 feet of hose for the small sum of $200.

The Record claims that some boys saw an alligator three feet long in the river Raisin at Adrian.

Hudson Gazette: Tecumseh may make a clean sweep of the county now—she's got a new broom factory.

The Madison grange will try for the premium for best display by societies at the next fair, offered by the county agricultural society.

As the graduating class of the Clinton High School is small this year an address will be delivered by J. W. Dowd, Supt. of the Toledo city schools. Subject, "The Trinity of Success."

Observer: Gov. Croswell will deliver the oration on the occasion of the great semi-centennial celebration of the first settlement of the Bean Creek country, to be held in Morenci in June.

Mr. Sherlock, of Clinton, lost seventeen chickens which were devoured by a neighboring cat. He loaded up his shot gun to demolish that cat, but the gun overshot the mark and demolished Coffin's rooster.

Observer: The scarlet fever which produced quite a scare in North Seneca, has pretty much subsided. There were six cases in all, three of which proved fatal, and the balance are convalescent, and our township health officer, Dr. Stevenson, is hopeful that the worst is over.

Tunis Osgood, of Adrian, has patented an improvement on the railroad car brake which promises to prove a very bonanza for him. His invention is in the nature of a valve, which releases the brake, which sometimes causes accidents by clinging to the car wheel longer than desired.

Morenci Observer: A worthy couple in North Seneca are the happy parents of three children with exactly two years difference in their ages, their birth days occurring on the same day of the month. Nothing but close attention to business could produce such mathematically fine results.

Clinton News: A novel feature has been introduced in a class in composition in Miss Haggart's grade. The class are furnished with blank books containing outlines for a serial story, and the class are to fill them in according to their own notions, thus developing their inventive powers and at the same time acquiring the ability to express their thoughts in good language.

Adrian Press: A peddling fakir lighted his lamp, mounted a box by Metcalf's store Tuesday evening, took his banjo and drew a crowd. Pretty soon the Salvation army got around to their praying ground in front of the Record office, directly across the way from the "fake." The Salvationists sung and prayed and the fake talked loud and fast in selling his wares. The scene was laughable, and the fake found he had his match.

Hudson Gazette: That rain on Wednesday just raised Old Nick. It put a stop to planting and interfered with other farm work, to the general disgust of the sturdy yoemanry. In Hudson it spoiled the docoration day exercises toward which our people had been looking with such great expectations. It also prevented the base-ball contest and chagrined our lovers of the national game. And lastly, it put a damper on the festivities of the band entertainment in the evening, and indeed caused a very general disappointment all around. It was a very wet day.

THE MUSTARD PLASTER

When my good man is sick,
He thinks to scape disaster
By having on his quick
A red-hot mustard plaster.
La, sakes, I mind it well
What happened from his notion
'Twas in a big hotel
Off somewhere by the ocean.

Whereof, the dead of night
John groans so diabolic
A-waked me with fright;
I knew it was the colonic.
Quick, Sary, bring I cry—
Get me a mustard plaster—
The kitchen—fly, do fly—
And save my husband master.

I know not how I found
The kitchen, but returning
The place seemed turned around,
Or else a spell was burning.
At last I reached my room
[illegible] my husband
Bedstead [illegible] the floor
[illegible] the flooring.

The plaster, how I groped
Performed [illegible] it.
The other, guess I hurried
And put it [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] quick to the room came rushing
Where I arrayed in again.
I had hard work to stop my thinking
But when the gas was turned—
[illegible]
For [illegible]
[illegible] that [illegible] man.

FATHER OR SON?

"Who is that, deacon?"

Mrs. La Rose, seated in the Jersey "carryall," that belonged to the "Deacon Harland Place," looked across the fertile fields of her old friend's farm, and fixed her eyes with a certain interest on the tall, well-developed young man who was coming down the lane, leading a handsome colt by the forelock, while the colt rubbed his velvety nose affectionately against his master's shoulder, and nuzzled his hand.

"That is my son Joe, Mrs. La Rose—my only child," replied the farmer.

"How much he is like you, as you were in your 18th year, when I came from teaching school to visit your sister Hetty, at the old place in New Hampshire," said the widow, speaking for once without affectation, and ending the sentence with a sigh.

The deacon looked uneasily at her and then at her lovely 16-year-old daughter, who sat on the front seat beside the hired man, who was driving the party home from the railway station at Ellintown.

In his 18th year, a poor farmer's son, he had been this woman's lover.

Now, in his 55th year, the wealthy proprietor of a most valuable and extensive fruit farm in New Jersey, he was betrothed to his old love's beautiful daughter, and she was coming with her mother to pay her first visit to her future home.

The worthy man was not deceived. He knew that this lovely child did not love him. He fully understood that she was about to wed him at the entreaty of her mother and in the hope of securing for that mother the wealth, the freedom from all pecuniary care, and the luxurious life and home, which she had never yet enjoyed.

All these things he meant to secure to her. In return, he hoped and believed that she would learn to love him. Gratitude would surely teach her that lesson, since as her mother declared, she loved no one else.

But it would be fatal to her hopes to let her guess the least knowledge of the early love that had existed between her mother and himself.

And he blessed his lucky stars, when his startled chestnuts, scenting their stable, and seeing Joe's bay colt prancing beside his master in the lane, broke into a run that tested the strength and skill of Mike, the driver, and frightened the widow entirely out of all her reminiscences by the time they condescended to pause before the verandah steps.

Joe Harland viewed the arrival with profound disapproval from afar.

He had loved his mother tenderly. He resented what he considered a slight to her memory. He was wrong there, however. The deacon had been a widower for more than five years, and all the widows and old maids in Ellintown had long since given up in despair trying to keep house for, and to sympathize with him.

A maiden sister of the deacon's had managed the affairs of the household since the wife's death. She, as well as Joseph, had been greatly surprised when the farmer had announced the speedy coming of the lady guests from New York. And she, as well as Joseph, had supposed the elegant widow to be the bride-elect.

In the old days on the home-farm in New Hampshire, this sister had been the Hetty, whom Julia Carlyon had visited. And, knowing so much of the early love affair, she naturally supposed that it was now about to be renewed.

Mistress Hetty welcomed the mother and the daughter very cordially to Harland's, deeming it well that she should keep on the best terms with its future mistress.

Joseph did not appear until the late tea—which was ordered in compliment to the travelers—was on the table. Then he came forward at his father's request, was introduced to the guests, made two sulky bows, and studied his future step-mother's face during the whole meal, from under a pair of heavy black eye-brows, with a pair of deep blue eyes. He scarcely looked at little Esther, who sat beside him.

But she stole many a side-long glance at him—wondering why he looked so stern—wondering why he was so silent—wondering if his father really had been so handsome at 18 years of age. Trying to imagine the gray-headed deacon a tall, erect figure, with dark-blue eyes, and jet-black hair, and a frank, handsome face, with sun-burned, crimson cheeks, and a forehead white as snow—trying, but failing miserably! And, then wondering again whether the deacon at 18 had not been more agreeable as a lover than he was now at 55.

"If only—" thought little Esther, glancing once more, musingly, at the young man and the old.

And then she blushed hotly all over her beautiful face. For the young man had turned toward her to offer her a slice of golden honey-comb and his dark blue eyes seemed to read the thought of which she was but half-conscious herself, until he looked at her.

"Why did she blush like that?" was Joe's first thought. And his second was, "What a lovely little creature she is! I must try and make this place endurable to her, while our elders are making ~~fools~~ of themselves by fancying that, at their age, they can fall in love!"

From that very evening, the funniest kind of a "Comedy of Errors began in the Harland house.

The deacon was forever finding Joe in his way when he wished to say sweet things to his prospective bride.

Sister Hetty wondered why her brother took such pains—unheard-of-pains—to please his future daughter-in-law, when her approval was of no consequence whatever.

"I wonder Julia stands it! I wouldn't, if I was in her place," she continually murmured to herself, as she noted the daily increasing attentions that the poor man tried his best to pay.

While the widow looked on in sore dismay, and finally (being urged thereto by the deacon) gave her daughter so severe a training to accept what she termed the distinguished country that Esther's heart was nearly broken.

[illegible] saw her, that very evening, as he was coming home from the village with [illegible]

[illegible] mistress's lessons was not yet one hour old, and Esther was crying quietly under the maple trees in the lane, so that she did not see Joe, till he had fastened the colt to the nearest tree, and was kneeling down beside her, asking in the kindest of voices what had gone wrong.

[illegible] and sprang to her feet when she saw him there, and so very near.

"Oh, go away please, and never let me see you again," she sobbed. "Mamma says that I have been so very wrong and immodest too—oh, dear, oh dear!—because I have talked so much to you. Oh won't you go and be somewhere else, please, where I never shall see you? I'm sure I never can marry your father, Joe, if you stay here."

"What?" shouted Joe so loudly that the bay colt gave a tremendous jump and almost broke his bridle.

In two minutes he had coaxed the whole story from the weeping girl.

"Well, of all the—. However I won't swear about my own father!" he exclaimed. "Now, Esther, this mustn't go on another hour you know. It is abominable nonsense."

"But it, Joe?" she sighed. "Only think of my being your mother-in-law."

"Wait a little, darling, if you will be guided by me," said Joe, as his arm stole around her waist, and his bearded cheek nestled against her smooth one.

They talked long and earnestly in that shaded lane, while the young moon rose, and the bay colt listened with his head over Joe's shoulder, and looked remarkably wise.

Finally, the colt and the buck-board were turned toward Ellintown once more, and the eight-day clock in the deacon's hall was on the stroke of 9 when they returned.

In the lane they met the deacon, driving the widow in his one-horse chaise, drawn by the sorrel mare.

They had missed Father and Joe at last, and were just setting out to search for them.

"Esther, leave that disgraceful carriage at once, and come home with us!" cried the widow, as she caught sight of the buck-board and its double freight. "How dare you? As for you, Mr. Joe—"

"As for me, Mrs. La Rose, Esther is my wife, and you must not speak to her unless you speak kindly," said Joe. "We were married by Parson Willis, at his house, at 7:30 this evening."

Joe drove on toward home without another word.

The widow gasped for breath; the deacon turned pale, then grew red with anger.

"Oh, hush!" cried the widow, as "unparliamentary" words poured by the dozen from his lips. "Perhaps he was only joking. You might go to Parson Willis and see."

"Trousers under the skirt," remarks a fashion paper, "are universally worn by equestrians." Well, yes; we should think equestrians with trousers outside the skirt would be a spectacle sufficiently startling to attract considerable human attention, if indeed it would not scare the horse. And, then, to consider the amount of ingenuity required to get both legs of them on over the same skirt.

Facts Speak For Themselves.

C. R. Hall, Grayville, Ill., writes: "I never sold any medicine in my life that gave such universal satisfaction as Thomas' Eclectric Oil. In my own case it cured a badly ulcerated throat, and in threatened croup in my children it never failed to relieve."

The railroad between Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico is said to be a marvel of engineering. It ascends 7,000 feet—4,700 in twenty-five miles. It passes from hot to temperate, and from temperate to a cold country. It spans ravines, scales precipices, and plunges into the bowels of the mountains below, then up into the clouds again. To construct this line took thirty-six years, forty Presidents and one Emperor. It is a "dizzy" road.

"William, do you know why you are like a donkey?" "Like a donkey!" echoed William, opening his eyes wide. "No, I don't." "Do you give it up?" "Yes." "Because your better half is stubbornness itself." "That's not bad. Ha! ha! I'll give that to my wife when I get home." "My dear," he asked, as he sat down to supper, "do you know why I am like a donkey?" He waited a moment, expecting his wife to give it up, but she didn't. She looked at him somewhat commiseratingly, as she answered: "I suppose because you were born so."

Hunting Wild Hogs in Tennessee.

The early settlers brought hogs with them into the country, and having little or no food for them, suffered them to stray off among the hills to root for their own living. The mast, which is very abundant in these hills, consists of hickory, beech and chestnuts, as well as acrons, so that hogs, deer and turkey grow fat on it in the fall and winter. Hogs stray off miles away from their owners, and become as wild as deer, and it requires as much skill and cunning to capture the one as the other, and in course of time their whole nature is entirely changed. Instead of the fat, lazy inhabitants that we see on the farms, or in a house yard in any frontier shanty, they become fierce and wild beasts. Tusks grow tall and slender. Their ears stand up straight, their hair grows long and wiry, and in short they are a different animal in habits, nature and appearance.

Sometimes whole droves are plenty in some hills, but they seldom attempt to capture a hog from a drove, for which they are likely to be captured themselves.

The people who live in the hills depend almost entirely upon game for their supply of meat. The wild hog is not fit for food in summer, but grows fat in the late fall and early winter on the great abundance of mast in these great forests. The hog here is not considered the property of any one settler, but is looked upon as common stock property for all who may choose to pursue and capture him.

After a hard night's rest on a blanket before a log fire, we are up by daylight to find about three inches of snow on the ground, just what we wanted. Even the long Kentucky rifle is left hanging in the rack in the cabin. Our outfit consists of a stout hickory club and a butcher knife, the latter tightly belted around the waist in a leathern scabbard. These are the only sporting tools used for hunting wild hogs in these hills, and they are very effective, as we shall presently see.

Some seven or eight of us, with as many stout dogs, set out that morning, and after a tramp of three miles or more we began to discover signs of game. We now halt and hold council of war. Our old bush-whacker, Judge Newland, is chosen captain of the party, and the plans of the hunt chalked out by him.

"You see, boys," said Captain Jack, "here is the range of a drove, and you see by the signs and fresh beds, as well as the tracks in the snow, that there is about twenty hogs in the drove, big and little. Most on 'em is big fellows, and will give a hard fight. Now, Jim and Ned, take two of the dogs and go round that pint of hill over thar. Sam, you and Bob just kinder crawl around over that ar' nob and lay low. The rest of us will follow on the trail. When I see the hogs I'll holler like an owl. Then you answer. Hoo! hoo! hoo! same as me, case I see the hogs a rootin'. Then pitch in and head 'em off till the dogs come up.

The snow gave us a good chance to see the hogs a good way off, and we had not proceeded far before we sighted them a few hundred yards away busily turning up the leaves in search of food. Here we halted behind trees, and Captain Jack gave the call in imitation of the big-horned owl, which was answered by the two other parties. This was the signal for attack. We started in on a run to surprise the game, and soon the dogs had brought the hogs to bay. The rest of the hunters now arrived with all the dogs, and the fight commenced, each one urging his dog to seize a hog by the ear, and watching his chance would jump astride of him and holding on with one hand would put in his deadly blows over the head with his club, and as soon as down, out with his butcher-knife and plunge it up to the hilt in the hog's throat then off for another. The chase and slaughter are thus kept up for a mile or more, or until the dogs and men are tired out or all the hogs are killed, when we retrace our steps and make arrangements for gathering in our game.

We have seen a stout hog bound off through the woods with his rider while the dog was fast to his ears, and carry both a considerable distance before being killed. The sport is ludicrous in the extremic, as well as being attended with considerable danger, and unless one is familiar with it he is pretty apt to get severely hurt by the side slaps of the hog's long tusks. When we charged this drove the fight was exciting and furious. As for ourself, though not a coward, we must confess that we often preferred to take refuge up a sapling and watch the fight than participate in it. The day was far advanced when the sport ended. We all assembled and built a large fire, and proceeded to drag the slaughtered hogs into camp, which provided a very laborious job. When all the killed had been brought in we counted eleven large fat porkers. It was now near dark, and we concluded to camp there for the night, returning to where we had left our provisions in the morning. On first discovering the game and bringing it into camp we hung up the hogs, to have them ready for transportation. We cut out tenderloins and broiled them on the live coals, and enjoyed a hearty supper and breakfast. During the night we were awakened by a pack of wolves which had assembled on a neighboring hill to give us a grand serenade. We could not see them, but should judge from the great noise they made there were fifty at least, and had we not eight or ten stout dogs and a large fire they would doubtless have made an attempt to capture and carry off our game.

Women's Rights in Africa.

The Bolanda negroes in Africa believe in the supremacy of woman. It is with them the law that women shall sit in the councils of the nation; that a young man, entering upon the matrimonial state shall remove from his own village to that of his wife, and, in forming this relation, he shall bind himself to provide his mother with food so long as she shall live. Here, too, the wife alone can divorce the husband, and the children, in that event, become the property of the mother. The men cannot enter into the most ordinary contract without the permission of the lady superior of the domestic circle. In the very heart of central Africa is the paradise that many women are vainly striving for in America, and the rights she clamors for here are already granted in this far off country to women, and by what we call an "uncivilized people." A few delegates from Bolonda might be of good to the cause, for they at least can speak from experience of what, to us, are yet untried laws.

A MALARIAL VICTIM.

The Trying Experience of a Prominent Minister in the Tropics and at the North.

TO THE EDITOR:

The following circumstances, drawn from my personal experience, are so important and really remarkable that I have felt called upon to make them public. Their truth can be amply verified.
